Doubled airport top priority

The ministry of transport has placed a top priority on expanding Victoria International Airport, the Times has learned.

An MOT construction proposal, which will go to the treasury board for approval, would double the size of the Pat Bay terminal.

Construction would be carried out in stages.

Jack McKernan, chairman of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce task force on airport expansion, today praised the announcement as "the first firm indication we are going to get some action."

But the MOT report also indicates Victoria will have to adjust to the idea it is not an international airport and probably never will be.

The federal government has said the word "International" must be removed from the airport's title. The MOT has delayed taking action out of deference to the feelings of the Victoria community.

This is the construction plan that will go to Treasury Board for approval:

— First, spend $250,000 to re-locate about half a kilometre of Willingdon Road to make way for the new terminal. (Willingdon is a private MOT road that goes from the airport to the Pat Bay waterfront. The new terminal would be constructed where Willingdon joins the ring road, to the west of the present terminal building.)

— Second, spend $1 million to build a new arrival apron to the north of where the new terminal building will be. The MOT argues that the apron must be installed before the terminal is expanded. It is no help to have a terminal if planes can not taxi up to it. In the meantime, the new apron can be used in connection with the present terminal.

— Third, spend $2 million to build a new terminal building, twinning the present structure. The new building would be for arrivals while all the space in the present building would be for baggage and departures. The two buildings would be connected by a covered walkway.

— Fourth, eventually the two structures would be joined and the outdoor baggage area would go under cover. The outdoor baggage facility has a low priority in the MOT plan.

There is no firm timetable in the report but the MOT is hopeful construction could get under way within a year.

The road re-location work could be done this year. There is no allowance for it in the 1980-81 estimates but because $250,000 is a modest amount, the funds could easily be found and the project has a high priority.

The MOT will ask for funds for the apron and the terminal expansion in the 1981-82 estimates. This would allow work on both projects to get under way next year.

McKernan said the proposal is fairly modest and therefore is something Ottawa could accept.

Iran tough on oil

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iran has stopped oil shipments to Portugal and is discussing selling oil to the Soviet Union following growing Western support for U.S. economic sanctions against this country, says Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar.

Moinfar said in a telephone interview today oil shipments have been halted to Portugal after that country announced backing for the U.S. trade embargo. There are signs Australia and Denmark may follow suit.

Meanwhile, Japan faces a cutoff of Iranian oil Monday unless it agrees to a price increase demanded by the National Iranian Oil Co., Japanese government sources said Saturday.

They said the shipments will almost certainly cease because Japanese importers, heeding the government's advice, will refuse to pay the extra $2.50 a barrel.

Already high oil prices have sent Japan's international trade into a record $2.45 billion deficit after years of surpluses, a finance ministry said Friday.

In Tehran, meanwhile, thousands of high school students joined university students in a new wave of political unrest.

Informed sources said several colleges, including Tehran's teachers college, changed hands several times as rival student groups fought for control following a government move to kick out "anti-Islamic" elements from universities.

The governing Revolutionary Council has ordered all political groups to close their university offices in the next three days or the government will do it by force. (For a closer look at these developments, see page 61.)

Meanwhile, a senior Iranian official denied today that revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had ever said the U.S. Embassy hostages would be held until after this year's American presidential election.

President Carter said Friday he had reports that the ayatollah had said the hostages, held since last Nov. 4, would not be freed before the U.S. elections in November.

Woman tiger finally netted

Esquimalt police are heavy a sigh of relief a 31-year-old woman charged with a series of hit and run accidents Friday afternoon is safe and sound . . . in the Victoria police women's lockup.

Police said the woman kicked and clawed at three officers who went to arrest her and later while they were booking her into the lockup bit one of the officers, Constable Jim Askew, so hard on the ankle he had to be taken to hospital for treatment and injections.

Askew is still hobbling this morning from the attack.

Police picked up the woman in connection with three hit and run accidents shortly before 2 p.m.

Police said two cars were rammed outside 874 Flemming and third hit in the 800-block Colville by a car which then left the scene. Damage was estimated at about $1,000.

Officers found the car outside an apartment on Fisgard and went in to get the suspect.

The woman, whose name was not released, has been charged with three counts of hit and run, dangerous driving, impaired driving by drugs, assault causing bodily harm, obstructing police and resisting arrest, assaulting a police officer and driving while prohibited.

Pierre's plan 'preposterous'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — It's not often Ed Broadbent gets an invitation to snub the Prime Minister of Canada.

Pierre Trudeau gave him that chance Friday and the NDP leader grabbed it and loved it.

Trudeau admitted to reporters at his first weekly news conference of the new Parliament that there was some truth to reports that the Liberals were interested in some kind of "working alliance" with the NDP to offset their lack of representation in western Canada.

The press raced to find Broadbent. The NDP leader, feigning a mixture of puzzlement and outrage, said he had no idea where such rumors might have originated. His party was not at all interested. In fact the New Democrats find the whole idea "utterly preposterous."

Hard as he tried to look astonished, Broadbent was clearly in a state of suppressed glee.

"It seems strange to me that a party that favors high interest rates and is drifting toward small "c" conservativism should be looking for an alliance with our party," he said. "I would think on most policies they'd be more likely to look to the Conservative Party as an ally than to us.

"To have such discussions, even in principle, at a time of majority government is something that could only be done in the most frivolous way."

Trudeau had left himself wide open for the snub. He admitted that some members of his party are horrified by the idea of an alliance with the New Democrats, but said he personally finds it acceptable at a time when his party desperately needs a voice in the West.

Meanwhile, John Crosbie, former Conservative finance minister, says he was disgusted by federal Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's announcement that the new Liberal government will not bring down a budget until fall at the earliest.

"My reaction is one of contempt and disgust because this was a party that defeated the budget that we had offered," Crosbie said. "Surely they must have had alternatives."

Shopowners bubble

Peter Gregory summed it up best.

"Beautiful," he replied when asked for his reaction to Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen's announcement Friday that the province is considering opening up wine sales to the private sector.

"I'd sure like to have it," said Gregory, co-owner of Little Gem Grocery, 148 Superior.

His sentiment was shared by virtually every small grocery store and delicatessen owner the Times contacted in a random survey Friday.

Nielsen said the provincial government may be shifting some sales of alcoholic beverages to the private sector, in stages.

The demand for exotic wines is growing and there is not enough room on LDB store shelves — so the government will open a specialty wine shop. Soon, private enterprise may be allowed to operate wine shops, with prices fixed by the government. Further participation by private enterprise in sales of other alcoholic beverages might be allowed at some time in the future.

"It would be a really great thing," said an enthusiastic Barbara Sletvik, owner of Brandywine in Colwood. "We even have the name to go with it."

"A great idea," echoed Sandra Hutchings of International Gourmet Deli, 747 Fort. "What a boost it would be for all of us."

'Peace a woman's job'

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Betty Williams shudders at the thought of ever being considered a feminist.

But she remains convinced about one thing: when it comes to making peace, well, that's a woman's job, not a man's.

She hardly needs to prove her point. She and life-long friend Mairead Corrigan were recipients of the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize for their work in organizing Northern Ireland's Peace People movement.

Williams will be in Victoria Sunday. Her visit, sponsored by the Victoria branches of Amnesty International and World Federalists, includes a talk at Metropolitan United Church, 1411 Quadra beginning at 7:30 p.m.

In a phone interview from Vancouver she told the Times her message is simply this: women have to start to take a bigger role if there is ever going to be peace in the world.

"Look at this way, we are the givers of life, and because of that we have got to be the protectors of life, too."

That's the basis of the dramatic mothers' marches to end the senseless internecine hostilities in Northern Ireland.

It was the horror that went on before that sparked formation of the movement in 1976.

Williams had her own share of grief. Two cousins, one 18 and the other 21, died at the hands of terrorists. She herself lost an eardrum in a bomb blast shopping in Belfast. She was lucky. The woman in front of her got 90 stitches in her face. Three others were blown to bits.

When Corrigan's three

Action expected in stages

experiences in Calgary and in Quebec at Mirabel airport and it is being very cautious. This is a sensible, practical plan to get money for expansion."

By asking for the money in stages, he said, the chances are much better of getting it.

McKernan said the MOT plan deserves the community's support because it has a good chance to succeed.

"And, quite frankly, there are no good alternatives."

He said it is a pipe dream to hope that private enterprise might step in and expand the terminal, expecting to recover the cost through leases.

(CP Air had suggested it might take on the task if the MOT's air transport committee would give it the right to fly into Victoria. The company pointed to private enterprise's role in expanding the Terrace airport.)

However, the Terrace experiment has failed, McKernan said today. Pacific Western Airlines has backed away from the project because of high financing costs and because it has decided it can not recover all of its investment.

"Airport terminals lose money," McKernan said. "No one in private enterprise can afford to go into a venture like that. It is something that should be done by government as a service to people."

The MOT report indicates the government will continue to be the only agency constructing airport facilities in Canada, as far as passenger traffic is concerned.

There might be a role for construction by private enterprise in connection with freight traffic at some airports.

The MOT report indicates Ottawa is still considering a suggestion that local communities be allowed to form commissions to operate airports. These commissions could play an active role in promoting further expansion. A decision on the commission idea is expected later this year.

On the question of international status, Ottawa has decided British Columbia does not need two major trade airports so close together.

The definition of international is as follows: the airport must provide regularly-scheduled service to other countries not counting the United States.

Victoria has regular trans-border flights to the U.S. but all its flights to other countries are by charter only.

The MOT concedes there is little likelihood Victoria would ever be required to be the connecting flight for regularly-scheduled overseas flights because Vancouver is performing the service already.

McKernan said the word "international" apparently annoys some federal officials who have arrived at Victoria airport.

"I gather that a directive goes out to remove the word but no action has been taken so far."

The MOT report says the expansion plan will give the airport all the facilities it needs to handle increased traffic as a result of the proposed convention centre.

Customs crews will only be able to handle 117 people at a time but plane-loads of twice that number could arrive. The procedure, used in some other airports, would be adopted of having half the people wait aboard the aircraft until the other half have gone through customs.

The MOT plan, which may involve spending in the range of $1 to $5 million befor its completed, is a scaled-down version of a proposal made two years ago to spend $10 million at Pat Bay.

Since 1978, Ottawa has been scaling down expansion requests to meet urgent immediate needs and not providing room for future growth.

Victoria now has been placed in the category of an urgent, immediate need as far as the MOT is concerned.

Search off

Pacific Rescue Centre has called off its search for a 50-year-old Vancouver man who is missing and presumed drowned in the Sechelt area.

The search for Fugihiro Komori began Friday after his boat was found floating upside down in Skookumchuck Narrows near Egmont.

Komori is believed to have to gone to the area to dig for clams.

Stranded Iranians shut out

Times News Services

Seven Iranian university students stranded in Canada since the U.S. broke diplomatic relations with Iran were denied permission to re-enter the country by the State Department Friday.

Five of the Iranians, on a field trip to Vancouver with a University of Idaho architecture class when President Carter announced the diplomatic break April 7, have not yet indicated to Canadian authorities whether they want to stay.

Two Iranians enrolled at Washington State University also were barred from returning to the U.S.

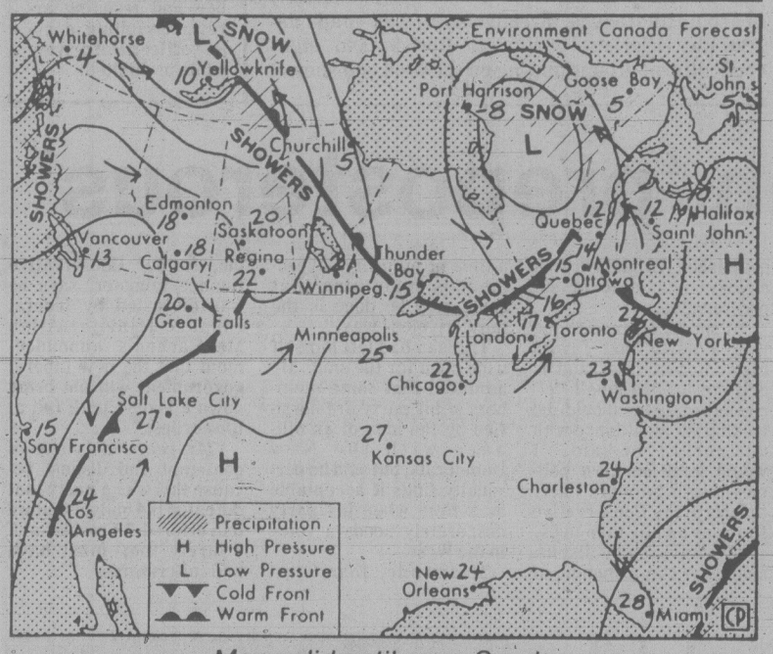
the weather



Map valid until noon Sunday

A frontal system moving slowly across the province from the northwest was responsible for generally cloudy conditions overnight. Most of the shower activity was confined to coastal areas. The front will move across to Alberta by late today with cooler unstable air following behind. The resultant cool and unsettled weather pattern will dominate for the next few days with generally cloudy skies and a few showers forecast over much of the province.

Island man killed in grisly accident

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — Timothy Ronald Turgeon, 31, of Port Alberni was killed Friday when he was drawn into a paper-cutting machine at MacMillan Bloedel's Alpulp division mill.

Authorities said the victim was attempting to dislodge a clog in the machine when he was dragged into the device and crushed.

Members of the Canadian Paperworkers Union local shut down mill operations for two shifts in memory of Turgeon, saying they would resume work at 8 a.m. today.

BMW 528i

BMW has long been acclaimed as builder of the best sports sedans in the world. But the advent of the 528i represents a major evolutionary step. Added to the 528i's precise handling, sure-footed suspension, and spirited performance are new engineering innovations to meet the requirements of the 80's. Trimmed to 2.8 litres, the engine actually delivers better acceleration than its acclaimed predecessor, the 530i. A mini computer, called a Lambda Sensor, constantly analyses exhaust gases and automatically adjusts air fuel ratios for optimum combustion efficiency and economy.

If the BMW 528i is miserly with gas, it is generous with its joys. With its smooth, instant, exact response to the throttle, the 528i lives up to its ROAD & TRACK review: "If the 530i was already our favorite sports sedan, the 528i increases the middle size BMW's margin over the rest".

Sawmills shorten work week

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Local sawmills are reducing work weeks to four days rather than shutting down as the crunch in the lumber market gets tighter.

Gordon Douglas, a spokesman for Northwood Pulp and Timber Ltd., said Friday that the company had cut back its Houston sawmill operations by 20 per cent, leaving the impression 20 per cent of the work force had been laid off.

"We had to cut back; it's an economic reality - the market just isn't there to maintain full production," he said.

"The last thing we want to do is shut down or curtail operations, but it's better than continuing at full operations until the company goes broke — then there's nothing for anyone."

Northwood-owned sawmills in Houston, Prince George and Upper Fraser have all been placed on the four-day weeks.

"This cutting back, or laying off, is happening throughout the industry," he said.

Weldwood of Canada announced Thursday details of one and two-week layoffs, starting April 28, affecting 779 workers in the Cariboo.

Other mills in Prince George district and throughout B.C. have also been going to four-day weeks or layoffs.

The International Woodworkers of America says almost 5,000 of the union's members are now off work in B.C.

The decline in U.S. housing starts, following rising interest rates, is being blamed for the layoffs.

When the market first began to slump, industry in the province called for a change in stumpage rates, which are the royalties paid for trees on Crown land. Forest Minister Tom Waterland decided against a new system in December.

The B.C. Council of Forest Industries has predicted 12,000 workers could soon be out of work because of the slump.

Conservation 'up to you' Bennett tells tree barons

VANCOUVER (CP) — The apparent endless sea of trees in B.C. is really a limited resource to be nutured and protected if the province's forest industry wants to stay in business, company representatives were told Friday.

Premier Bill Bennett and one of the industry's top executives delivered the warning at the Council of Forest Industries annual conference.

"We can't bring back the days of unlimited forest resources," Bennett told about 700 delegates.

"It is largely up to you, the forest industry, to provide the innovations and new technology to change and improve methods of harvesting, processing and marketing our forest yield."

The government will only be a partner in forest management, but has designated an unprecedented five-year forest and range resource program, he said.

Industry must achieve an orderly transition from harvesting old growth to a new industry based "on the use of well-managed, vigorously growing and efficiently used second-growth timber."

Travel limits 'outrageous'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A construction industry request that unions hold the line on travel and living-out expenses is provocative and outrageous, a union spokesman said Friday.

The unions want a $3.50-an-hour increase in a one-year contract, said Roy Gauthier, chairman of the Building Trades Bargaining Council, because wages and conditions "fell drastically behind during, and as a result of the infamous Anti-Inflation Board era."

"We have placed before the industry a reasonable set of proposals that will enable the industry to enjoy another year or so of peace and harmony," he said in a news release.

Gauthier said that the Construction Labor Relations Association, which bargains for the contractors, "has decided to introduce provocative, unacceptable and thoroughly unreasonable demands implying a roll-back of hard-won conditions and privileges in a hard-working, dangerous and specialized industry."

"Their attempts to hold the line on travel and living-out expenses in a period of cost escalation and inflation is outrageous."

Contractors are urging their unions to lower their demands or face an accelerating move to non-union construction in B.C.

Association president Chuck McVeigh said that the trades also have to remove some of their restrictive practices.

Catch limits introduced on groundfish

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal fisheries department has introduced a quota system on the previously unlimited commercial groundfish catch.

Spokesman Wayne Shinners said controls are intended to protect groundfish stocks and to encourage the use of non-traditional groundfish such as hake, pollock and turbot.

He said quotas also may enable commercial groundfishing to operate year-round.

Regulations call for periodic closures of biologically sensitive groundfish areas, quotas on overfished species, and minimum net size requirements.

The Georgia Strait fishery is restricted to a 4¼-inch net mesh, while the minimum mesh measurement for outside waters is expected to be lowered one-half inch to three inches.

The plan will mainly affect trawlers, which catch groundfish by dragging a bag-shaped net along the ocean floor.

Line blocked

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The Canadian National Railway main line was blocked Friday by a 10-car derailment at Foster, B.C., 96 kilometres west of Jasper, Alta., a CNR spokesman said.

All cars were empty and there were no reports of injuries, the spokesman said, adding that cause of the derailment had not been determined.

Freedom of movement

It is fortunate for Canada that the words spoken with respect to the Quebec referendum in the House of Commons this week were a cut above those emanating from the B.C. Legislature.

For the first time in recent memory, a prime minister opened a Throne Speech debate without the usual heckling from opposition benches. Onlookers reported an eerie silence as he spoke.

But two days after Trudeau delivered a most passionate plea to Quebecers and to all Canadians to overcome the forces dividing the nation, our MLAs' attempt to go on record in support of a unified Canada degenerated into disgusting partisan wisecracks. They'll try again next week after the government presents a resolution that is still being drafted.

In the meantime it would be worthwhile for all Canadians to reflect soberly on Trudeau's analysis of the opportunites that could be lost to all of us if tensions are allowed to split this country along regional boundaries.

Even if certain people are incapable of revelling in the diversity of a multi-cultural, two-language country, every Canadian should be able to appreciate the potential loss of a few simple freedoms — the freedom to roam 5,000 miles of spectacular landscape without borders or passports, the freedom to move your family and take a job in another province without immigration regulations, the freedom to dream of travelling or moving within the country and know that it's possible.

Those freedoms which belong to all Canadians are being vastly undervalued when leaders like Premier Rene Levesque advocate a sovereign Quebec, or when B.C.'s Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm says Western Canada can survive quite well without Quebec.

As Trudeau said: "We can already see Canadians slamming the door in the face of each other." Provincial barriers are going up to restrict the flow of labor, capital and services within Canada. Apart from the Quebec issue, British Columbia has told an eastern firm it can have no part of MacMillan Bloedel; Newfoundland said jobs on the offshore oil rigs are reserved for Newfoundlanders; Alberta threatened to turn off the oil tap. These barriers are starting to erode freedom of movement.

Conversely, Trudeau stated: "If the only way to share in the country's wealth was to move from one region to another, we would be losing one of our basic freedoms." He also pointed out that an Albertan shouldn't have to give up a share in the province's wealth just because he moves to Newfoundland. Likewise a Newfoundlander shouldn't have to move to share in the wealth of another region.

These simple freedoms have been a Canadian birthright only because all regions have joined under the umberalla of confederation. Without all of the parts and a strong central government, a voice that can speak on behalf of a national interest, they will be lost.

The preservation of freedom of movement is reason enough for us all to urge Quebecers to vote No May 20.

Eliminating insect with insect

By RICHARD RING

Very soon the depredations of the Winter Moth larva will become apparent in the gardens and along the boulevards of Victoria and surroundings municipalities. The small, green looping caterpillar has a voracious appetite for the buds and leaves of a great variety of broad-leaved plants, including fruit trees; shade trees and many ornamentals. This moth (Operophtera brumata) is a native of Eurasia where it is distributed from northern U.S.S.R. to the southern shores of the Mediterranean, and from Japan to the British Isles. For the past 50 years there have been sporadic outbreaks causing severe defoliation of forest, fruit and hazelnut trees in various parts of Europe.

Jump to Victoria

In North America, the Winter Moth was first recorded in Nova Scotia in 1949. Initially confined to the southeast corner of Nova Scotia it eventually extended its range to neighboring regions of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. It is not certain how long it has been in the Victoria area, but specimens in the Pacific Forest Research Centre indicate its presence since at least 1972.

Recent surveys have shown that it is now widely distributed in Greater Victoria, on the Saanich Peninsula, and as far north as Nanaimo. Although it does not appear to have a foothold on the mainland, four adult moths were collected in Richmond in 1978 and a few others in the Richmond/Delta/Ladner areas in 1979.

A common feature among the many agricultural pests in North America that have been accidentally introduced from Europe is that natural enemies are normally few in number or absent altogether. The fact that the Winter Moth is an introduced species coupled with the knowledge that it is 18th on the "most undesirable insects" list of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has led to attempts being made to restrict its spread from the southern tip of Vancouver Island. Short-term goals are aimed at chemical control of the egg, larval or pupal stages, whereas the objective of long-term control is an integrated program utilizing a combination of approaches such as biological control, use of pheromones (chemical attractants that bring the sexes together for mating could be used to disrupt normal mating behavior), spot treatments of insecticides when necessary and compatible with other forms of control, and sound management procedures.

Biological control seems one of the most promising — it is likely to be permanent, less harmful to other components of the ecosystem, and generally more intellectually appealing.

There is at present a biological control program in effect against the Winter Moth in the Victoria area sponsored jointly by the B.C. ministry of agriculture and the Canadian Forestry Service. It is based on the introduction at designated sites of the two parasites that brought about spectacular control of the Winter Moth in Nova Scotia, namely the small parasitic fly, Cyzenis albicans, and the parasitic wasp, Agrypon flaveolatum. They are not harmful in any way to man or other animals.

The program carried out in Nova Scotia was a text-book example. Of the 63 species identified as parasites in Europe, six were introduced into Canada. As luck would have it the two aforementioned species not only proved compatible with one another but were in fact complementary — Cyzenis being more effective at high population densities of the host, Agrypon at low population densities.

Dramatic results

Within three years of becoming established the level of parasitism had reached 10 per cent and within another three years the pest population had collapsed. The whole program cost about $160,000.

The first releases of parasites in the Victoria area took place in the summer of 1979, but according to the Nova Scotia model it will be at least another five years before one can say whether or not the venture is a success.

A week in Central Canada

OTTAWA — The week's work . . .

Sunday — Run into, at my peril, Farley Mowat. Tells me he's on an elevator at Toronto's Harbor Castle during the ACTRA awards. Joe Clark steps on the elevator.

Clark: "Hello, Farley. What you doing here?"

Mowat: "ACTRA awards."

Clark "You accepting one?"

Mowat: "No, I'm a donor."

Clark: "Oh. Blood or semen?"

Mowat: "Neither. I just present an ACTRA award."

Clark: "I could use one of those."

Monday — There is a useful time, each date a Parliament opens, when one can observe the skeletons of a political party.

Faithful labors

By that I mean the troops behind the generals, the dutiful party workers who are being paid off for faithful labors by being invited by MPs and party brass to the fluff and receptions and reflected glory of Opening Day.

By sifting through the cocktail parties and balls and individual MPs' guests, a beady-eyed sociologist can get a drift on the socio-economic base to the party's support.

Last spring, when the woebegone Tories stumbled into office momentarily, the corridors of power and gin were filled with tentative, polite, genteel representatives of Toryism from small towns and small ambitions.

Today, we are baek into Basic Sleek. Upscale coiffed, Toronto trendies, every ambitious young lawyer of the land.

This is what the Liberal party represents: the upper middle class of WASP Canada (plus 74 Quebec seats) that is used to power and is dumbfounded when it doesn't possess it.

Tuesday — Shaking my head in hopes it doesn't contain rattles, re-read once again Mr. Trudeau's statement in Throne Speech: "Because my Government wants to strengthen the spirit of Canadian unity and nurture the seeds of renewal, it promises to interpret a vote of 'No' to sovreignty-association as a vote for the rebuilding of the Canadian federation."

What that really says is that if Quebec will only vote "no," Ottawa will finally set out to make changes in the system that would have to come about if Quebec votes for Rene Levesque's "yes."

Most overlooked point of the week is the one Joe Clark makes during his Leaders' Day speech: it is the first time in memory that Canada's external affairs minister, a chap called Mark MacGuigan, has been relegated to the second row of the government benches. Confirming, as we all suspected, that the new Canadian external affairs minister is someone called Pierre Trudeau.

Wednesday — Attend CBC reception, Ottawa, for Barbara Frum and Gordon Pinsent, who are to receive Order of Canada that night from Gee-Gee Ed Schreyer. Al Johnson, a Saskatchewan boy who made it to president of CBC, notes that Pinsent has won best actor awards in film festivals in Toulon and Yorkton. "I like that juxtaposition, Toulon and Yorkton." So do I.

Attend The Canadian Press annual dinner, Royal York, Toronto. Guest speaker, Peter Lougheed, blue-eyed cowboy who goes to the whip immediately. For 40 minutes flays the cream of Canadian journalism with the dogma: Alberta is mad as hell and isn't going to take it anymore.

Infidels have come

Lougheed does not believe in anything so frivolous as wit or levity. Not a diversionary anecdote mars the doleful 40 minutes. By the end of the flagellation, editors and publishers of Central Canada have their shoulders in the ice cream. They drag themselves from the ballroom, knowing their days as masters of the realm are behind them, the infidels at the gate.

Thursday — Receive letter from TV friend in South Africa, recounting the new East European travel slogan: "Visit Russia. Before Russia visits you." I like those links.

Friday — Highly amused by P.E.T.'s first press conference as Liberal party's contribution to conservation : recycling leaders. Asked, since he claims he won't run again, how he can enforce his dictum against aspirants starting their leadership runs too soon, he says he can't dictate who his successor will be, but can certainly punish anyone who breaks the starting gate. Sorry, won't work. Have I ever been wrong?

Spring madness

A visit to the B.C. legislature these days leaves a bitter taste in the mouth — the taste of bile.

The legislature of Canada's last pioneering province has never been a place where sweet reason and well-researched debate on the major issues of the day prevail. Yet only occasionally has it descended to the level it has reached this session — a level where all issues, major, minor and middling, have become completely subjugated to petty political gamesmanship and outpourings of generalized hostility.

Nothing is being accomplished that will be of any benefit to the average B.C. resident. The emotions and frustrations that have been stirred since last spring's election and last fall's Dirty Tricks Affair seem to have become so intense that the collective House is guided by them, rather than by normal standards of intelligence and logic.

It should be made clear from the beginning: it is not all MLAs who have fallen into this morass. A number on both sides of the House remain aloof from it, doing their best to deal with proper issues in a proper manner.

On a random day this week (Thursday), for example, Labor Minister Jack Heinrich gave perfectly reasonable answers to perfectly reasonable questions from the NDP about possible health problems being caused by asbestos dust in the refitting of the Queen of Prince Rupert. Gary Lauk (NDP-Vancouver Centre) and Education Minister Brian Smith held a rational and detailed debate about the possible problems of inappropriate material that has found its way into the files of teachers. Environment Minister Stephen Rogers gave a sensible — and amusing — answer to a previous day's question about pollution of a Penticton lake by duck and goose droppings.

But after that, it was all downhill. Debate on the spending estimates of the premier was the order of the day (as it has been every day for the past three weeks), and that appeared to be little more than an open invitation to hostility.

Barbara Wallace (NDP-Cowichan-Malahat) opened debate with a speech about difficulties in the poultry-processing industry. Her concerns appeared well-founded, but as deputy speaker Walter Davidson (doing a yeoman's job under trying circumstances in the absence of Speaker Harvey Schroeder) pointed out, they clearly dealt with the agriculture ministry, not the premier's office.

No matter. Davidson's remarks were the sparkplug for a lengthy series of alleged points of order from both government and opposition members, discussing just what subjects were suitable for future discussion. To put it in the mildest possible terms, it was a silly debate.

Eventually it led to a recorded vote in the House. (The NDP calls these votes two or three times each afternoon to ensure that government members don't sneak off to their offices to accomplish any real work.) Not surprisingly, the government won the vote.

Debate resumed. Wallace stood up to continue her speech. Health Minister Rafe Mair argued that by calling the vote she had lost her place in debate. Davidson agreed. That led to another vote.

And so on and so forth.

At one point NDP members were raising some interesting points about low-interest loans and grants from the B.C. Development Corporation going to private companies of which BCDC directors were owners or directors. Davidson pointed out that although the points might be valid, a different minister was responsible for BCDC.

Nonsense, said the NDP. The premier had said he wanted to talk about interest rates, and they were talking about interest rates — the interest rates BCDC set for companies in which its directors had an interest.

And so on and so forth.

It should not be suggested that the NDP is the only party playing these silly games. The Social Credit benches contribute regularly with heckling that would not be funny in a preschool play-yard.

On another random day this week (Wednesday), Social Credit members couldn't even manage to get through an hour's mini-debate on national unity in a statesmanlike manner. They found it necessary to descend into the lower reaches of a sewage trench with comments suggesting the NDP weren't really in favor of a united Canada and even had had links to the FLQ.

A few years ago a senior legislative reporter proffered some advice about the B.C. House. "This place," he said, "is quite amusing provided that you never ever allow yourself to remember that these people are actually running this province."

Unfortunately, they are.

The credit junkies

BOSTON — They've dubbed it the Great Credit Crunch as if it were a new breakfast cereal. Like polished admen, they even insist that it will be good for our health, though a bit hard to digest.

Well, I suppose, the comparison isn't a bad one. After all, the same cereal companies that got our kids hooked on some sugar-coated floating bits of empty calories now market high-fibre health cereals. The same people who got us used to the squishy white bread you could roll into a one-inch ball are now guilt-tripping us back to bran.

So too, the people who gave us the credit munchies are now bringing us the Crunchies.

A decade ago, the banks started sending out credit cards that we never asked for and extending credit lines that we never applied for. Stores stopped asking for money, except monthly. And the money people started hard-selling credit. They not only offered "lifestyle loans" for such essentials as vacations, they promoted debt to consolidate your debts.

By 1974, the revolving credit of Americans was up to $13.4 billion; by 1980 it had peaked at $55 billion. And by now, the majority of us are into high-water finance.

Of course, nobody tortured us until we bought on time. Nobody forced us to use our credit cards. But what they did was put us through a mass experiment in behavior modification that worked.

For more than a decade, we were reinforced for borrowing. They not only made it easy and attractive to use credit; they made it virtually essential.

The one way to get a bad name in financial circles was to pay cash. We had to owe money to be a good credit risk. Every time we reached a credit ceiling someone was sure to offer us a raise.

There was even something patriotic about borrowing, since lending kept the economy flowing.

Today, for every person who charges imported champagne, there are two who charge tuition. For everyone who puts a stereo and an electric popcorn popper on the card, there are six who put sneakers and T-shirts for the kids.

It is no surprise that we turned into a nation of credit junkies. We did what we were supposed to do: get hooked.

Now, the people who made a profit pushing the addiction are protecting their margins by marketing the cure. We are learning the true meaning of the American motto: Fly Now, Pay Later.

Credit cards are being repossessed, credit lines are being redrawn, and applications are being denied. Just when the demand for credit is highest, the supply is lowest.

This is no surprise. When money-lending is profitable, they giveth; when it is not, they taketh away. That's money biz. But what is remarkable is the ease with which the same people who once extended credit are now extending lectures.

We are being told, with a slightly paternalistic nod, that we never should have over-indulged. We are being sermonized on the evils of becoming borrowers by our former lenders, as well as leaders.

The friendly folk at the First and the Second and Chase banks and the rest make us feel guilty for doing what they wanted. They remind me of their peers who are trying to make us feel equally guilty for not putting money into savings accounts, so our neighbors can get mortgages. They offer to pay us 5¼ per cent, so they can lend at 13 per cent.

It turns out that credit cards were the Frankenberries of our financial world, and now we are breaking our teeth on the crunch. We are left paying for the dental work while the sugar dealer huffs that we should have known better.

The whole atmosphere reminds me suspiciously of my favorite line from my niece's school play last week: "We live by the Golden Rule. The one who has the gold, makes the rule."

Sartre addressing workers outside Renault auto plant in Paris in 1970

Jean-Paul Sartre

He is the conscience of the young

By JOHN GERASSI

(Gerassi is a professor of political science in New York and is now preparing Jean-Paul Sartre's authorized biography. He wrote this article for Newsday after the death of the French philosopher this week)

Some of us may not even know his name. Many of us have never even read his works. But most of us use his language — and feel his thoughts — every day of our lives.

Fail though we may, we try to face our situation and overcome our anxieties by leading authentic lives in committing ourselves to our projects and to our fellow man. Understanding that we can never escape our background, our heritage, our time and space in a world that we have neither chosen nor accepted — in a phrase, our human condition — we, nevertheless, continuously try to give meaning to our absurdity through our action, the responsibility for which we reluctantly yet defiantly, painfully yet proudly, proclaim as our own.

When we hedge, when we blame others, when we hide in the dark closets of rationalization or in the gaudy showroom of determinism, we know — deep in our hearts and souls — that we are guilty of bad faith.

Whether we like it or not, we — the three generations of this century — are all the children of Jean-Paul Sartre.

To many academicians, Sartre is a bad philosopher. His emphasis on the "I" as a starting point to consciousness of self is too solipsistic, they say. His constant re-evaluation of man's situation, forcing a perpetual questioning of our ethical imperatives, is too arbitrary, they complain. His ferocious commitment to the changing complaints of the downtrodden and of the underdog makes him too fickle, they conclude.

True, in the genteel halls of academia and in the carefully manicured gardens of officialdom, Sartre's philosphy could find no home. He posed too many difficult questions without giving permanent palliative answers. He rummaged through too many hidden recesses of the mind to console the complacent. He scoffed at too many dogmas to soothe the tormented.

But to the young in age as well as in spirit, he remains their conscience. He told them as he told himself, over and over: The world may be a meaningless fact that you cannot control, your pain and your suffering may be the dictates of gods you can never know, your death may be no more rational than your life, yet you are what you do — and you know it.

Said Sartre: By making this whole absurd conglomeration of contingent events known as "life" your very own, by understanding that whatever you do, you posit it as an absolute moral value for all others, by doggedly seizing existence as your own and tenaciously heralding it as valuable, hence as moral, you are truly alive — and free.

To Sartre, and to us, his children, freedom became defined by its limits. To choose is also not to choose its opposite. Freedom is therefore painful. It generates anxiety. Human beings are thus the only creatures who can give meaning to their existence. For meanings, like childbirth or any creative act, are the result of effort, that is, pain. With every choice we make, Sartre said, we feel the "other." With every act, we establish a human bond. And that bond is what we call morality. Thus by starting with the egocentric "I" human beings discover the social — and, more significantly, the collective — "we."

Sartre lived by what he preached. In each situation he made his choices and acted accordingly. Naturally, therefore, he made mistakes. Sometimes the mistakes were awful, as when he sided with the Communists in 1954 and defended the ideology's monolithic iron heel in words ("The Communists and Peace") and in deeds (by consciously acting as he said, as their potiche or front man in their Peace Congress propaganda network). But he never blamed others for his being a fool, and undid his mistakes with equal fervor (as in his book, The Ghost of Stalin, in which he attacked Russian communism and criticized himself for his earlier support).

Sometimes, he was alone among intellectuals in standing for his convictions. During the May 1968 "Events" — the worker-student uprising — for example, he, like France's other famous men of letters, was booed by rebellious students; unlike Communist poet Louis Aragon, who reacted by calling the youths "a bunch of punks," Sartre went home to figure out why he had failed to communicate, not why they could not understand. Out of that experience, Sartre concluded that the young would never again opt for a revolutionary party that did not proclaim the absolute worth of each individual. The result, which some have dubbed his "anarcho-Maoism," was a political philosophy of action which, while opposing the stratified and hierarchical bourgeois state, insisted that revolution must be made while fighting for it — in other words, that the end is only justified by the means.

Sartre was an enormously generous man and very modest. Though he earned a great deal of money with his plays, novels, essays, philosophical works and biographies of Baudelaire, Genet, and Flaubert, he died in debt, having given away most of his fortune to political movements and activists and to an untold number of struggling intellectuals.

He spent mornings writing his biography of Flaubert, afternoons and evenings dashing off political tracts, and still found the time and strength to participate in literally hundreds of street demonstrations denouncing injustice. "The role of the intellectuals," he would say, "is to explain the issues and to communicate the battles, not to define them. The people choose battles."

Sartre's philosophy is difficult to live. Perhaps because of that, most Anglo-Saxon commentators and teachers, raised on an escape-crammed philosophical tradition of pragmatism, preferred to praise the moral message propagated by Sartre's existential rival, Albert Camus. Since all organized actions lead to doctrinaire authoritarianism, said Camus, all we can do is shout, "No!"

Bad faith, replied Sartre. What we must do instead, he said, is commit ourselves over and over again. No act is pure. All acts are choices that alienate some. No one can live without dirty hands. To be simply opposed is also to be responsible for not being in favor, for not advocating change. To fall back on the proposition that human actions are predetermined is to renounce mankind. No writer can accept the totalitarianism implied by "human nature." If he writes, he wants to change the world — and himself. Writing is an act. It is commitment.

Sartre remained committed all his life. Once he had experienced dependency on his fellow fighters during the war and in the subsequent resistance movement, he concluded that our only hope, for each individual one of us, was to understand that there is no "I" without the "we," that as long as one man sleeps on a bed of roses while others collapse on beds of mud, each of us remains incomplete — and partly dead in our souls.

That is the message that our generation, and those to come, takes from Sartre, the man and the work. In more than a dozen classes I have taught in the last few years on the philosophy of commitment, I have found that Sartre more than any other writer of our century best reaches the inner depths of the young.

They may think that they belong to the "me" generation. But they are just as angry, just as anxious, just as tormented as we of my generation were. And not only because of their individual fates. The future of those who sleep on beds of mud continues to gnaw at whatever self-complacency they exhibit. Sartre shakes them out of their dogmatic slumber in a way Hume's philosophy never did and never will.

With Sartre, they understand that there are no shortcuts to truth, or to life, love and revolution. He not only speaks to them directly, he lives inside them. Sartre is not just the century's greatest moralist. He is also its greatest prophet.

MLA's view

The governent doesn't have to make a decision about a tunnel-bridge crossing to Vancouver Island before 1990. If it adds a short ferry link across the Strait of Georgia it can get to the year 2000 with the same number of ferries as we have now. Cost: $500 million as opposed to $3 to $5 billion following the "imaginative" schemes which Science Minister Pat McGeer has been discussing recently.

The economic choice is obvious. Improve our present ferry fleet. Add the Iona to Gabriola crossing. Then we can carry four times as many people and cars as we do now. And we can save the equivalent of one year's provincial taxes in the process.

Current forecasts suggest doubling in traffic over the next decade and a redoubling by the turn of the century. These additional flows can be carried by 10 Cowichan-class vessels. Replacing 10 existing ferries, they are capable of carrying double our present traffic volume. This they can do with the same number of sailings and the same number of employees as B.C. Ferries employs today.

The challenge of the 1990s, meanwhile, can be met by adding a new crossing from near the Vancouver International Airport on the mainland to Gabriola Island, just south of Nanaimo. The route in this case would be 17 miles long, not 34 miles as is the case between Horseshoe Bay and Nanaimo and 28 miles from Tsawwassen to Swartz Bay. Two new terminals would have to be built, of course. But a 10-ferry fleet made up of Cowichan class vessels could then redouble its efforts. It could carry four times the number of passengers and cars which B.C. Ferries moved in 1979.

Ten new ferries would cost $300 million. The terminals and highway connections at the Iona-Gabriola crossing would cost another $200 million for a total of $500 million. That compares to many billions of dollars for a "fixed link" comprised of tunnels and bridges of the type currently being discussed by the planners in Victoria.

Even if we went for a bridge-tunnel scheme we would still have to build a number of new Cowichan class ferries. We would need them while the fixed link was under construction. So the saving in staying with ferries and adding a new crossing over the Strait of Georgia is immense. It is an economic imperative for another decade at least.

Also, propelling vessels on the surface of the water is the most energy efficient and dollar effective mode of transport known to man.

Few people realize that our coastal waterways are valuable economic assets. They are level highways which don't require the horsepower that other modes of transportation do. Tugs and barges can move goods far more cheaply than trains can, trucks or airlines. Ferries can do the same for people and cars. If they must be moved at public expense then they should be moved by B.C. Ferries.

No, we don't need a single "fixed link" across the Strait of Georgia now. We don't need it before the year 2000. True, a transportation breakthrough could occur in the intervening years. But our best bet now is better ferries and a shorter route from the Mainland to Vancouver Island. Economically speaking they have it, hands down, over brute force alternatives like bridges and tunnels. — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

No facilities

Having spent a pleasant afternoon at the Inner Harbor, watching the Blessing of the Fishing Fleet, I found I had to answer a 'call of nature' and realized again to my disgust Victoria City Council doesn't think we need these facilities, the nearest public toilets being Centennial Square (and has City Council used these lately?), other alternatives being the Empress Hotel or the Museum.

I'm sure the management of the Empress has hordes of tourists, not to mention native Victorians, using their toilets, and the Museum has enough of the public without extra traffic.

While on this subject, if we continue to pour sewage into the Straits instead of building a proper sewage system, we won't need a bridge or tunnel, we will be able to walk across. — P. Kelly, 345 Vancouver Street.

Unfair to Scott

Re: article in the Victoria Times of April 12 on Roald Amundsen and Robert Falcon Scott:

Amundsen's journey to the South Pole was brilliantly done, but it was just a dash, using dogteams.

As far as I understand, Captain Scott set out as a scientific expedition, with a team of scientists. Many fine photographs, full plates were taken to illustrate the nature of Antarctica by Ponting, his photographer. Volumes of these I have seen in Leeds University.

Rock specimens were collected and were found strapped to the sledge at Scott's last camp where they had been held captive some days by a blizzard after their long manhaul short of the strongest member of the party, P.O. Evans.

At the time the expedition was planned, it was not planned as a race to the South Pole.

From what I have read of the team's diaries I would not say that Scott ranted but rather that he was quiet spoken and considerate. Surely the article is unfair to him. — Leonard Humphreys, Sooke.

Tsitika inviting 70-style clashes: Sierra

The provincial government has stepped back to the early 1970s in dealing with the public on environment issues, a Sierra Club spokesman said today.

Confrontation will once again be the only option, said Bruce Hardy, the club's western Canada representative in Victoria.

He said his group is angry about the provincial Environment and Land Use Committee's recent decision not to support conservation groups in putting forward public views involving the last unlogged forest on Vancouver Island's east coast.

The government, he said, has denied even basic aid to spokesmen for the public interest in connection with monitoring and planning in the Tsitika watershed, north of Kelsey Bay.

"This is a very clear signal that the government still does not want to face up to the problems and still intends to carry on with the policies which created many of the problems in the first place.

"Unfortunately, this puts us right back to the early '70s — confrontation between the public and the forest industry," Hardy said.

Since 1973, he suggested, there had been two significant developments concerning the forests. One recognizes that forest industry problems are real, not simply in the imagination of environmentalists, and involve overcommitment, inadequate reforestation, logging impact on other resources and inefficient use of wood.

The second thing is that the public demands a greater role in making decisions affecting the public interest.

Forest companies, out of necessity, are dealing with the first item, and government is becoming more and more obliged to listen to the public, the club declares.

"THE CAT 215 EXCAVATOR GETS THE JOB DONE FASTER."

That's the judgement of Cat 215 owner-operators after on-the-job experience. George Stuart, President of Upland Excavating Ltd., Campbell River, tried the 215 and a major competitor as rentals. He kept the 215 and returned the other machine – here's why:

"The 215 is an all-around faster machine – both the travel and cycle are faster. It's also much superior in maneuverability, has better clearance and better lift height with the bucket curled."

Walter Nicholson, owner of W. K. & K. Contracting, Port McNeill had similar comments. He uses a 215 for land clearing, and after a head-to-head comparison with the same competitive unit, said:

"The 215 has superior speed and better clearance. Travel speed is faster; swing cycle is faster."

Make the comparison yourself. Then remember another important point: Finning's unmatched parts and service support through 51 locations in B.C., the Yukon and the MacKenzie Valley, NWT.

Finning gives you a better product and better product support!

Waterfront centre endorsed by APC

The Advisory Planning Commission has recommended that Victoria amend its zoning bylaw to allow a waterfront convention centre on Wharf Street.

City council asked the APC to hold a public meeting on the proposed amendment, which would allow public buildings in the special harbor commercial zone on the Inner Harbor.

That was held Tuesday and turned into a one-sided hymn of praise by downtown businessmen for the proposed convention centre.

Opponents of the centre were not allowed to speak under APC rules because they didn't have an interest in property within one block.

The APC decision on Thursday night at a closed session to approve the rezoning means council will hold a public hearing sometime next month at which anyone may speak regardless of whether they own property nearby or not.

The rezoning must have council approval before it becomes law.

Tillicum caucus: maybe

Downtown businessmen talked about the Tillicum shopping centre for two hours Friday but in the end upheld both free enterprise and the regional plan.

After a special closed caucus at city hall, followed by the regular meeting of city council's central business district advisory committee, businessmen endorsed a general resolution which neither condemned nor wholeheartedly supported the centre.

For example, Eaton's participation in Tillicum depends on the expansion of the centre. Eaton's Victoria manager Reg Hind is also a key member of the CBD advisory committee and a member of the Downtown Victoria Association, the promotion vehicle of merchants in the downtown core.

They also felt that Victoria businessmen would be considered biased by Saanich and would have little influence if they attempted to sway Saanich council to hold to its original promise to limit the size of the centre.

DVA president Philip Holmes said they were all agreed on the fact that the regional plan — which held Tillicum to 295,000 square feet and any future regional centres to 175,000 feet — must be upheld.

Holmes also said the principal concern of downtown merchants is that the new Tillicum centre, whatever its size, must be contained by zoning.

B.C. won't pull eggs from fire

VERNON (CP) — B.C. farmers belonging to national marketing plans are ineligible for provincial assistance if the national scheme fails to settle cost-of-production problems.

Jim Hewitt, B.C. agriculture minister, told the annual meeting of the B.C. Interior Egg Producers on Friday that national marketing boards such as the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency are organized and operated by producers.

"If there are problems with the scheme it's not up to the provincial government to step in and solve these problems — it is up to those signing the agreement to do this," he said.

The minister said the provincial government is firm in its intention not to include in a provincial farm income assurance program those producers feuding with national marketing associations and possibly being victimized by regional disparities in prices and cost of production.

"If we imposed income assurance in these cases we would be open to criticism of disrupting the national scheme by giving farmers here something that is not available to producers in the rest of the country."

Delegates complained the cost-of-production formula set by CEMA is unrealistic and too low for B.C. They said the low wage formula of the national plan and the cutoff level for low interest rates on loans allowed were unacceptable.

Sonics force seventh game; balance of '76ers fools Celts

By Canadian Press

Boston Celtics knew Julius Erving would get his usual bushel of points. What they didn't count on was Darryl Dawkins and Henry Bibby filling the basket as well.

With those three men playing key roles at various points, then pulling together in the stretch, Philadelphia '76ers won the first game in their National Basketball Association playoff series with the Celtics on Friday night.

The '76ers, who hadn't won in Boston all season, edged the Celtics 96-93 to grab the lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference final series. The '76ers also gained the home-court advantage in the clash of Atlantic Division powers. The next game is scheduled Sunday in Boston.

"The key tonight was they came down, and the things we didn't want them to do they did," said Boston forward Cedric Maxwell. "We didn't contain the people we wanted to contain.

"We know Erving will score his points, but when Dawkins scores a lot and Bibby comes off the bench and scores like he did, then we have problems."

Meanwhile, Seattle SuperSonics forced a seventh and deciding game in their Western Conference semi-final with an 86-85 victory over the Bucks in Milwaukee.

With the series tied 3-3 and the winner advancing against Los Angeles Lakers, the next game will be played Sunday in Seattle.

Lonnie Shelton scored the go-ahead basket with 1:18 left to play to lead Seattle to its triumph. Dennis Johnson scored 18 points and Shelton scored all of his 15 in the second half for the defending NBA-champion Sonics.

Marques Johnson netted 22 points for the Bucks, while Bob Lanier added 19.

"I'm really happy," said Seattle coach Lenny Wilkens. "We played great."

The game settled into a classic defensive struggle in the last 8:22 when the teams combined for only 19 points.

"It was great defence," Wilkens said. "Neither team was giving the other anything.

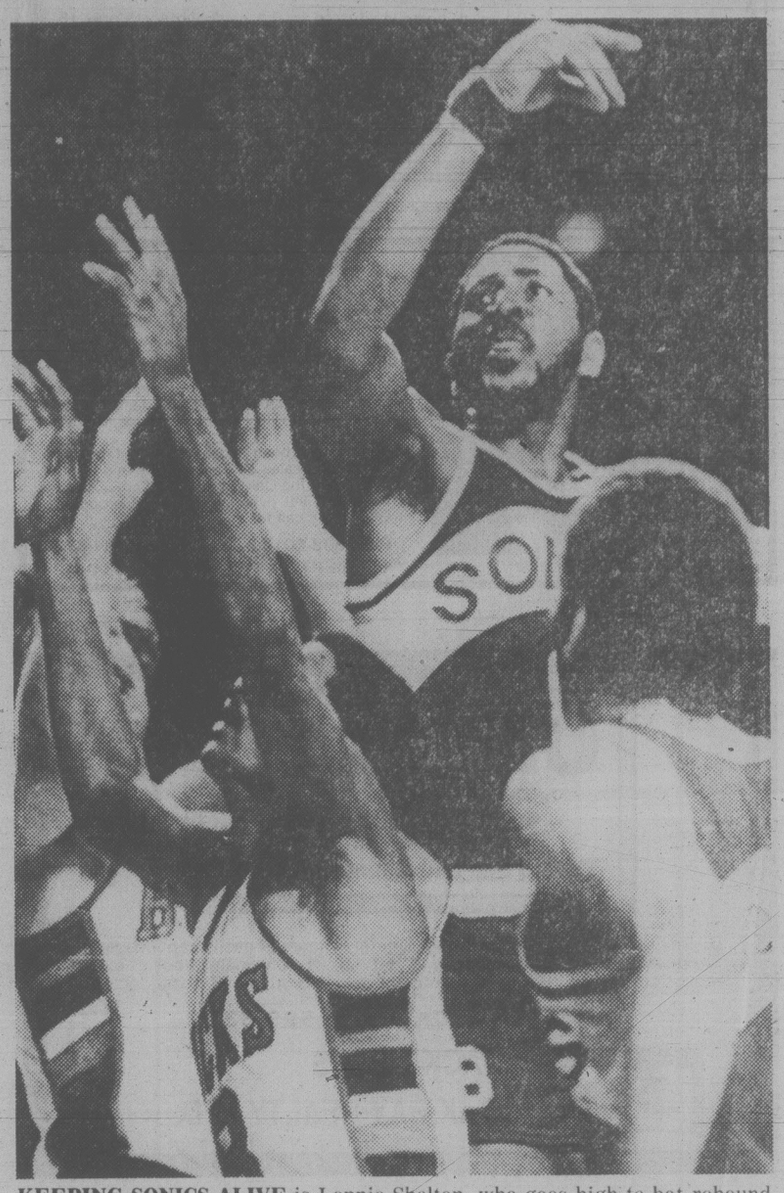
"The fans don't like it, but I think it's great basketball, with a lot of overplaying, good switching."

Erving finished with a game high of 29 points. Ten of them came in a 16-2 burst that transformed a 58-48 deficit into a 64-60 '76er lead with 5:24 left in the third period.

Dawkins had 23 points, six of them late in the game to break an 88-88 tie and put Philadelphia in front 94-90.

Bibby had 17 points and four assists in 26 minutes. He hit a critical jumper with 56 seconds left to make the score 96-93 and forced the Celtics to try a three-point field goal with 12 seconds remaining.

Larry Bird led Boston with 27 points and Maxwell had 21.



KEEPING SONICS ALIVE is Lonnie Shelton, who goes high to bat rebound away from Milwaukee rivals during National Basketball Association playoff game Friday night at Milwaukee. Shelton, who scored all his 16 points in second half, connected for go-ahead basket with just over minute remaining to help Seattle SuperSonics defeat Bucks 86-85. Victory squared best-of-seven series at 3-3, setting stage for deciding game Sunday at Seattle. (AP laserphoto)

Skillings joins Horrigan in rink-dumping switch

About people and things.

And look for several new lineups in the men's division when the curling season rolls around this fall.

Two at least deserve mention.

Tim Horrigan, the provincial Labatt's Brier rep, and Steve Skillings, so often the bridesmaid of Pacific Coast Curling Association playdowns, have dumped their rinks, as the saying goes, and gotten together, while a third veteran skip, Barry Harvey, has decided to let youth have a fling and he'll help as a third.

The Horrigan-Skillings marriage isn't a secret, really, because the pair entered the VCC men's bonspiel with Horrigan, just back from the Brier, on the teehead and Skillings at third. They were ably abetted by John Campbell, a former PCCA finalist from the Fraser Valley and now a local area resident, and Don Nemeth, who had curled with Skillings, as lead.

A powerful foursome, but it didn't win. Bill Morris of Juan de Fuca did. Still, it foretold of things to come.

All of which puts Brier reps Lowell Goulden, Horrigan's third; Kelly Horrigan, his second; and Dave Smith, lead, out in the cold along with Skillings' third, Murray Walker, second Rod Cummings and Nemeth. But not for long.

What Goulden, Kelly Horrigan and Smith will do is not known. They'd probably be welcome on any rink. But alas, one report has it that Goulden is thinking of returning to Nova Scotia. If so, he'll be missed. Smith, it is suggested, could end up with Len Stewart. Remember him? He was right there in the playoff picture a year ago but didn't compete this year because of an operation. Nemeth may also join Horrigan.

Which leaves Walker and Cummings enjoying free-agent status. Not really, and here's why.

Cummings, you see, wants to skip, while Harvey, long one of the leading contenders for championship honors, doesn't. So presto! There is your new rink: Cummings, Harvey, Walker and Kim Browning, who was dropped by Skillings a year ago.

As for being a skip, Cummings has some success behind him. Last year he skipped a mixed rink to an Island playoff berth and this year did it again.

Then there is the story that the old master himself, Keith Dagg, is interested in getting back into the sport in a more serious way. This winter he holidayed in Hawaii before the playdowns. It showed. But with whom will he become serious? That could be another surprise.

Another left-over item concerns the VCC bonspiel. Strictly personal, of course. There were several special awards at the prize-giving and your agent, as lead on his rink, was a joint recipent of one, for whatever reason. He has some ideas. At any rate, he and second Tom Machan were awarded the "best-worst" sweeping prize. A treasured honor, no doubt, because it's a first, but also a disservice to Machan. Tom really is a good sweeper who can't help it if he can't put as much weight into his work as the lead. Or could the designated words "best-worst" have been transposed? Hmmm! (Now about next year's Times sponsorship.)

Speaking of curling, Oak Bay Rec Centre members have been sent a questionairre asking, among other things, if they want a shorter season, i.e. from November to February, rather than from October to March. This has left the impression with many that the Rec Centre would rather cater to roller skaters than curlers. The curlers might ask in return: is this the thin edge of the blade? So say it ain't so, Oak Bay.

And hey, boy, have you been to Ex Park yet? The ponies are running again with a brand new computer world to help the patron figure his winnings even faster than ever before. The "Iron Men" are out and the new "tote" is in. And this one does everything except predict winners. It accomodates both buying and cashing and, if a patron wishes, he can make all his wagers for the day at one wicket before the first race.

The one-stop machine, Am Tote 300, accepts wagers from $2 to $250 on win, place, show, exactors, quinellas and daily doubles. Old betting habits are out, however, in the ABC method of wagering. First thing the bettor gives to the seller is the amount of the bet (A); second, the bet (B), win, place or whatever; and then the choice (C), No. 4 . . . and . . . well . . . you'll soon get the idea. When cashing your winning ticket, take it to any wicket, the clerk will put it through a scanner, the payout will be registered immediately . . . and I hope you had a good day.

Pickups banned for lacrosse final

The top echelon directed its greatest enthusiasm at "the biggest lacrosse event ever to take place," but the executive of the Canadian Lacrosse Association also managed some significant "house-cleaning" duties Friday.

Meeting in Victoria, the CLA executives preferred to point the spotlight at the Nations Cup, a five-team affair being heralded as the first world box lacrosse championship.

But they also took steps to bring out national equity between East and West.

The most positive move was a decision to ban pick-ups for the Canadian Mann Cup finals.

"From now on, we're insisting there be no pick-ups," said CLA president Brian Davies. "The teams will have to go with the guys that got them there."

Additions from other teams always stirred controversy. It happened again last fall when Victoria Shamrocks recruited mainland players en route to their Mann Cup triumph.

Davies also said the CLA is "discussing" methods to curb the heavy migration of Eastern players to the West. No concrete steps were taken and the issue is still being studied.

"We want to solve the problem in an equitable way," said Davies, "recognizing that it is an amateur sport."

Davies also said the CLA, while not involved in the Olympics, formally declared its support of the United States' boycott of the Summer Games in Moscow.

But for most of the time at a late-afternoon press conference, the lacrosse officials directed their enthusiasm at the Nations Cup.

Australia, the United States and, to a lesser degree, a North American All-Native team will supply the international touch to the tournament scheduled July 10-17. The East and West will be represented by teams leading the Ontario and Western Lacrosse Associations on June 21.

The East and West teams will not be allowed pick-ups.

The All-Native team will made up of players participating in an Eastern League with teams in Quebec, Southern Ontario and New York State with additions from North Shore Indians.

"It's going to be the biggest lacrosse event ever to take place," said tournament chairman Ed Linstead.

Teams will play a preliminary round-robin, which games scheduled in Victoria, Nanaimo, Kerrisdale, Coquitlam, North Vancouver and Coquitlam. The first-place finisher will draw a bye into the final, scheduled July 17 at Pacific Coliseum in Vancouver, while the second and third-place squads play off in a semi-final at Memorial Arena on July 16.

Preliminary games in Victoria are scheduled July 10, 12, 14 and 15 while Nanaimo will be the site of a match on July 11.

Matula ends Braves' skid

By The Canadian Press

Rick Matula's timing couldn't have been better.

The Atlanta right-hander tossed a five-hitter and picked up just the second complete game of his National League career as the Braves blanked Cincinnati Reds 3-0 — snapping major league baseball's longest winning and losing streaks this season.

"That's the best I've ever thrown," Matula said after pitching the Braves to their first win of the season following seven straight loses. Matula, his sinker working to perfection, used only 91 pitches and got the Reds to ground out 18 times in handing Cincinnati its first defeat following eight consecutive victories.

Elsewhere, Montreal defeated Philadelphia Phillies 7-5 in the Expos' home opener before 41,222 fans in Olympic Stadium; Pittsburgh Pirates outslugged St. Louis Cardinals 12-10; San Francisco Giants beat San Diego Padres 5-2, and Houston Astros downed Los Ageles Dodgers 7-1.

Gary Carter drove in four runs with a single and a three-run homer that capped a five-run, fifth-inning rally and gave Montreal its over Philadelphia.

Neither rain, nor snow, nor sleet, nor gloom of night can keep Mike Caldwell from the swift completion of his appointed rounds — which usually means beating New York Yankees.

All right, so maybe Caldwell didn't complete the job Friday, but he did nothing to lessen his reputation as baseball's resident Yankee-tamer, allowing just two hits and an unearned run in seven innings as Milwaukee Brewers spoiled New York's American League home opener with a 3-2 victory.

It was the first appearance of the season for the 31-year-old left-hander.

Fuhr's rookie prize adds to the sweep

Victoria Cougars, the Western Division champions, continue to stock up on invidual honors in the Western Hockey League.

The latest went to goaltender Grant Fuhr. The 17-year-old from Spruce Grove, Alta., is the coaches' choice as the WHL's rookie-of-the-year.

In becoming the first Cougar to win the Stewart (Butch) Paul Trophy, Fuhr thus places Victoria netminding in a unique position. Kevin Eastman, who edged Fuhr by the narrowest of margins, wound up as the league's top netminder with a 3.10 goals-against average. Fuhr, who earlier was named to the first all-star team, finished with a 3.14 mark, posted two shutouts and won 30 of his 42 starts.

In addition to Fuhr, winger Greg Adams also won first all-star acclaim while Cougar teammates Barry Pederson and Mark Robinson were second all-)tar choices.

Regina Pats' centre Doug Wickenheiser has been named most valuable player.

Wickenheiser, who amassed a league-leading 170 points during regular season play, is only the third MVP in the league's 14-year history to still have a year's eligibility remaining. Other 18-year-old players receiving the honor were Calgary goaltender John Davidson in 1971-72 and Regina's Dennis Sobchuk in 1972-73.

Other awards went to David Babych of Portland, named the outstanding defenceman, and Medicine Hat's Steve Tsujuira, chosen the most gentlemanly player with ability.

Eastman was confirmed as the top goaltender and Doug Sauter was awarded top coach's honors for taking the Calgary Wranglers to a second-place finish in the East Division.

Regina, meanwhile, moved to within one game of meeting the Cougars in the championship round by defeating the Tigers 5-2 before 3,983 Medicine Hat fans Friday.

Regina leads the best-of-seven series 3-1 with the fifth game scheduled tonight in Regina.

Mike Blaisdell scored three goals, the final one into an open net in the last minute of play, while Darren Bobyck and Barry Ziegler added the others for Regina. Bob Fleming and Stewart Robinson scored for Medicine Hat.

If Regina wins tonight, the best-of-seven final will open in Memorial Arena on Monday. Otherwise, the championship series will start Tuesday.

The first two games will be played in Victoria. If teams split, a third game also will be played in Victoria before the series moves to Regina. Cougars also will have home-ice advantage if a seventh and deciding game is needed.

Tickets for the first two games went on sale this morning. The Memorial Arena box office also will remain open Sunday, between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m.

James resigns

MELVILLE, Sask. (CP) — Jerry James, has resigned as coach of Melville Millionaires of the Saskatchewan Junior Hockey League.

Stars are believers but it took a while

By The Canadian Press

Minnesota North Stars are beginning to believe in themselves.

"It took us a while before we realized how good we could be," said Minnesota rookie Curt Giles. "It took us the whole season."

The North Stars have a chance this weekend to eliminate Montreal Canadiens, defending Stanley Cup champions, from the National Hockey League playoffs.

Minnesota leads the best-of-seven quarter-final 2-0 after taking the opening pair in Montreal. The third game is tonight with the fourth Sunday, also at Bloomington, Minn.

"We played very well in Montreal, but I think we can still play better," Giles said. "Things have been going well and we've got things in hand.

"But this series has a long time to go yet. What we've done won't mean anything unless we can continue it."

Bobby Smith, who has collected 10 points in the North Stars' five playoff games, said the team can finish the job if they don't beat themselves.

"Sometimes we can be our own worst enemy but when our game is going right, we are awful tough to stop," Smith said. "Right now, we're playing as well as we have all season.

"We have stopped worrying about what the other team is going to do. Instead of letting them take the game to us, we're taking it right to them."

Even with abundance of jeans, how will U.S. do without Games?

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet press mentioned for the first time Friday that the 1984 Summer Olympic Games scheduled for Los Angeles may be in peril.

The official news agency Tass was commenting on a report that the Moscow Summer Olympics would have to find replacements for 17,150 pairs of blue jeans that a U.S. firm, Levi Strauss, cannot supply because of the U.S. boycott of this summer's Moscow Games.

"Let Levi Strauss and Co. cram its warehouses with them," Tass said. "Moscow will do without the American trousers.

"But how, even with an abundance of jeans, will the Americans do without the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles? This is a question worth giving thought to."

Sports officials have said that if the International Olympic Committee decides to suspend the U.S. Olympic Committee for bowing to political pressures in supporting the boycott, Los Angeles could lose the 1984 Summer Games.

Weekend sports

Victoria-area sports fans will again find much more to watch on television than will be available for live-action viewing Sunday as the great wind-down of winter activities continues.

Although the number of sports still going strong has scaled down a lot in the last couple of weeks, there are opportunities to watch soccer playoff finals or junior "A" lacrosse in the afternoon.

TONIGHT

Television

Third game in the NHL playoff quarter-final between Montreal Canadiens and Minnesota North Stars is on Channels 2 and 6 at 5 p.m.

SUNDAY

For the soccer fans, there are three Vancouver Island League division finals and two of them are in Victoria. The first-division final is between University of Victoria Vikings and Gorge and it's at Prospect Lake Park. In the second-division game, Nanaimo City meets Port Alberni in Nanaimo and in the third-division final, it's Lakehill against Saanich Braves at Hampton Park.

And for those who'd prefer to watch lacrosse, Esquimalt Legion plays its first junior "A" exhibition game of the season against Richmond Roadrunners at 2 p.m. in the Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Or, if golf is your game, you could wander over and watch the start of the 31st annual Vancouver Island Open tournament at 9 a.m. at the Cedar Hill course.

Television

SportsWorld, on Channel 5 at 11:30 a.m., features boxing and gymnastics.

American Sportsman, on Channel 4 at 1 p.m., includes quail shooting, a wild horse roundup and bobsledding and is followed on the same channel at 2 p.m. by international boxing.

The rest of Channel 4's sports programming consists of Wide World of Sports at 3:30, featuring pool playing and motocross motorcycle championships, and the Sports Afield program at 5 p.m., which includes shooting and bird-calling.

Channel 5 has golf on at 1 p.m. with final-round coverage of the professional Tournament of Champions and motorcycle racing at 3 p.m.

But undoubtedly the biggest attraction for viewers here will be the Stanley Cup playoffs with the featured game on Channels 2 and 6 at 5 p.m. being the fourth contest in the best-of-seven NHL quarter-final series between Montreal and Minnesota.

Don't blame Graham for rushing interview

Times News Services

Lou Graham knew when he was well off.

The veteran had just completed his second round in the $300,000 Tournament of Champions golf tournament at Carlsbad, Calif. He had shot a 67 on a tough course. He hadn't made a bogey in the tournament. His 133 total was the best 36-hole score on the PGA tour this year.

He was taping an interview with a television reporter.

"Well, Lou, you're 11 under par and you're one behind," said the TV guy.

A roar went up from the 18th hole where Tom Watson was finishing his round. The interviewer made a quick check, and started the taping again.

"Well, Lou, you're 11 under par and you're two behind," he said.

"Man, I hope this isn't a very long interview," said Graham.

Watson was on another tear, firing a six-under-par 66 Friday to stretch his lead to two shots with a 131 total, 13 strokes under par on the tough, 6,889 yard La Costa Country Club course.

It was a 36-hole record for this elite event that brings together the winners of pro golf tour titles during the last 12 months. It was, by three shots, the best second-round total of 1980.

Only Graham could keep him in sight. No one else was within six shots.

In Orlando, rookie Carolyn Hill, maintaining a nearly error-free pace, shot a second straight three-under-par 70 for the second-round lead in the $100,000 Florida Lady Citrus Open. Her 140 total gave Hill a one-shot lead over Janet Coles.

Canadian Sandra Post was five strokes behind the leader with a 145 total, including a 75 in the second round.

Victoria club wins pair

KELOWNA — Victoria Y, the defending champion, is off and running in defence of the provincial juvenile girls' volleyball championship.

Just back from a tour of Japan, Victoria defeated Fort St. John and the B.C. Olympics of Vancouver in opening action Friday, winning both best-of-three matches by 2-0 scores.

Seventeen teams are entered in the British Columbia tournament, which winds up Sunday.

Canadian leader

YORK, England — Ronny van Holen of Belgium won the fourth stage Friday in an international bicycle race, but Bob Downs of Britain grabbed the over-all lead in the event that started in Amsterdam and was to end today at Manchester.

Downs placed second to van Holen in Friday's stage. The Belgian's time was three hours, 47 minutes, eight seconds for the 138-kilometre section.

Downs's over-all time was 15:48:50 to 15:49:22 for second-place Morten Saether of Norway.

Bernie Willock of Victoria is the best-placed Canadian, in 43rd spot with an aggregate time of 16:13:55. Right behind him was Pierre Harvey of Rimouski, Que., in 16:14:26.

Martin Cramaro of Hamilton stands 50th with a total time of 16:26:10, one placing ahead of Norman St. Aubin of Roxboro, Que., in 16:26:20. Paul Tettamanti of Vancouver stood 58th with 16:33:44 and Paul Sim of Winnipeg was 60th iin 17:22:39.

Legion tests Runners

Richmond Roadrunners will have a slight edge in returning talent when they face Esquimalt Legion Sunday at the Sports Centre in the first pre-season test for the Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League teams.

Esquimalt expects eight players back from last year, including Ed Van Dyk, who finished third in scoring, and Terry Jay. Richmond, coached by Gord Frederickson, is counting on 10 returnees, including the productive pair of Glen Jensen and Bob Johnston.

The game, scheduled to start at 2 p.m., is the first of four exhibitions for Esquimalt. Legion will face Victoria Shamrocks of the Western Association Tuesday at 8 p.m. Also arranged are contests with Coquitlam Junior Adanacs April 27 at the Panorama Arena in Sidney and the Victoria Senior "B" all-stars on April 29.

Fivepinners complete list for Times rolloffs

Colleen Marshall and Wayne Hendry have completed the list of award winners in the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest by topping their fivepin divisions in the final week of the 26-week event.

Colleen captured women's laurels with a 278-247-263—788 series rolled in the Bankers' League at Wilson's Bowladrome.

Wayne set the pace in the men's section with a 258-223-383 — 864 series in the Wednesday Majors League at Town and Country Lanes.

By winning the awards, Marshall and Hendry qualified, along with the 25 other weekly winners in each fivepin division, to compete for trophies and cash in the Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs at 1 p.m. May 4 at Town and Country.

Tenpin quaifiers will have their turn in the rolloff spotlight on April 27 at Mayfair Lanes, also at 1 p.m.

Rolloff contestants will not be required to pay bowling fees, whish will be shared by the kanes involved and the Victoria Times.

Rolloffs will be determined — like the regular weekly competitions — on the basis of three-game scratch series.

In the event of a tie, the bowler rolling the highest single game will be declared the winner.

Winners in each division of the rolloffs will receive Bowler-of-the-Year trophies and any rolloff champion who is a daily subscriber to the Victoria Times will also collect a bonus reward of $150.

Pension boost bill introduced

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill to increase by $35 a month the guaranteed income supplement paid to 1.3 million needy pensioners was introduced in the Commons on Friday.

The bill would increase the current supplement to at least $188 a month.

The legislation honors one of the main promises made by the Liberals during the Feb. 18 election campaign and Health Minister Monique Begin said she expects the legislation to be approved in time for the increase to appear on cheques this July.

The supplement is paid to Canada's neediest pensioners in addition to the universal old age security.

Asbestos Corp. fights back

By LEW DIGGS

MONTREAL (CP) — Lawyers for Asbestos Corp. Ltd. argued Friday that an obscure 1868 Quebec law knocks the wind out of the province's special asbestos expropriation act — and perhaps a slew of other laws.

The argument appeared at first to be a minor point in the company's wide-ranging case against expropriation, as lawyers emptied their legal cannisters against the government during pleas in Quebec Superior Court.

But the debate, and remarks by Chief Justice Jules Deschenes, indicated it could be a legal bombshell.

If the company is right, it appears the door could be open to attacks on numerous provincial laws, on grounds they conflict with rights "guaranteed" — although no one noticed for 100 years — by the Quebec Civil Code.

"It's a limited constitutional entrenchment of rights similar to the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Quebec Charter of Human Rights," company lawyer John Claxton contended.

The 1868 statute, which has been sleeping on the books for a century, gives many clauses of the Civil Code, which governs everything from marriage to property and contracts, the status of basic rights.

One code provision, based on the French Napoleonic Code, says no citizen's property can be expropriated without "prior payment of a just indemnity."

This conflicts with the expropriation law, which gives the provincial cabinet power to order a snap takeover of the company's $105 million in Quebec assets, leaving the issue of payment to be determined by a three-man tribunal later.

Normally, the expropriation act would take precedence over the more general provisions in the code. But lawyer Claxton, after extensive legal research, dredged up a section of Quebec's 1868 law on the interpretation of statutes.

It says any clauses of the Civil Code take precedence over subsequent legislation, unless the code provisions are specifically repealed. Similar clauses are contained in the Canadian and Quebec human rights charters.

Claxton said that, to his knowledge, this key section of the 1868 interpretion law had never been repealed.

As the argument was being spun out, Chief Justice Deschenes interrupted to observe that many laws had been passed in the last century which might conflict with the Civil Code, but which had not specifically repealed the code's relevant clauses. They "might therefore be challenged."

Later, he asked for precise evidence that the 1868 statute had never been repealed, telling the lawyer: "You're putting the court in the difficult position of having to reach a far-reaching conclusion on the basis of speculation."

ROCKIN' ROLLERS took to the rink with a disco beat Friday night at the Oak Bay Recreation Centre, where changing seasons have turned winter's curling rink into summer's roller rink. Opening night special was free admittance to anyone wearing a funny hat, and what with the current popularity of roller skates, and pop music on the sound system, it was a full house for both sessions.

Davis ready to enter fray

MONTREAL (CP) — Reports that Ontario Premier William Davis plans to come to Quebec to campaign in the sovereignty-association referendum drew responses Friday from both Premier Rene Levesque, leader of the yes forces, and Claude Ryan, leader of the no.

Levesque, who spent the day repeating already-familiar campaign messages in suburban Montreal, said Davis can come if he wants to.

But he warned Davis' presence might hinder the no side by creating the impression the federalist forces are desperate as the May 20 vote approaches.

"If some guy is going to come from outside and tell (people) what to do, I don't think it takes very well," Levesque said. "Could you see me going to Ontario as the premier of Quebec and telling them: 'Look why don't you kick out Bill Davis's government?' "

Ryan, also campaigning in Montreal, said provincial premiers who have a clear idea of the message they want to deliver in Quebec are welcome and needn't ask permission from the no committee.

"Every premier from any province is absolutely free to come and speak in Quebec whenever he wants," Ryan said at a news conference, adding that several premiers had already inquired about possible participation in the campaign.

Ryan, whose news conference was his only public appearance Friday, said he also is discussing the role that Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau will play in the campaign, but he denied reports that the prime minister will be rushed into the fray.

Western Canada's provincial premiers, meanwhile, will make a joint appeal for national unity to the people of Quebec at their conference next week in Lethbridge.

The unity question will be a priority.

Argentina to Yellowknife — almost

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — Jose Cesar Azzalini, who set out three months ago to drive 60,000 kilometres from Argentina to Yellowknife, has reached his destination — but not by car.

The car, a two-cylinder Citroen, was stranded south of Great Slave Lake when spring break-up made the MacKenzie River impassable, 300 kilometres from the goal he had set for himself 14 countries earlier.

The city of Yellowknife heard of his plight and sent him a return plane ticket from Hay River.

Civil War score settled in B.C.

Did U.S. assassins get right man?

By BRUCE LEVETT
The Canadian Press

In the final analysis, nobody could prove that old John Sharp was the infamous raider and guerrilla leader he claimed to be — but at least two men believed him.

They were the men who killed him, echoing 45 years later the bitter fighting of the American Civil War.

It all happened more than 70 years ago near the tiny town of Quatsino, B.C., and it began with a newspaper story.

The Victoria Colonist, Aug. 9, 1907, stated:

"Bill Quantrill, leader of Quantrill's guerrillas in the American Civil War 1861-1865 who, according to history, died of wounds in a Kentucky hospital after his raiders were cut up, is alive on the northwest coast of Vancouver Island under the name of John Sharp.

"This is a statement made by people who should be in a position to know."

William Clarke Quantrill was a schoolteacher who, history says, turned gambler, holdup man and murderer and later — as leader of a band of irregulars — was commissioned a captain in the army of the Confederate States of America.

After sacking several small towns along the Kansas-Missouri border, he led 400 mounted men into Lawrence, Kan., on Aug. 21, 1863.

Lawrence, on the Kaw River 40 miles west of Kansas City, was a main station on the underground railway by which slaves escaping from Missouri and other slave states fled to free territory.

Today, Lawrence has a population of about 45,000. In 1863, the population was 182 and Quantrill, with Frank James and Cole Younger and his brothers in the ranks behind him, slew 150 men, women and children and put the town to the torch.

Among the sources The Colonist cited as identifying Sharp was lumberman J. E. Duffy.

"Duffy was a member of a troop of cavalry which cut up Quantrill's force and he had no difficulty in recognizing the man," the newspaper said.

"Sharp . . . admitted to Duffy that he was correct in his recognition . . ."

The Colonist said Sharp, by then more than 70 years old, was grey-headed with a beard and lived in a forest cabin, working as a watchman for an abandoned coal mine.

"The story the old man at Quatsino told the informant of The Colonist was that when his band was cut up, he had been bayoneted in the chest and had a bullet wound through the shoulder.

"History says Bill Quantrill died of such wounds. Those who talked with John Sharp, who says he is Quantrill, say that he has scars of two such wounds."

Old police reports state that shortly after the story appeared, two men arrived by steamship in Victoria and registered at the Dominion Hotel. They made inquiries about Quatsino Sound.

Two days later, they left for the north aboard the steamship Tees. En route, they asked members of the crew where Sharp could be found.

The ship spent only one day in Quatsino and when it sailed back south, the two men were aboard. In Victoria, they took passage for Seattle.

In the meantime, a friend called at Sharp's cabin and found the old man dying of wounds inflicted by a heavy poker.

He was alive, but he refused to say who had assaulted him. Sharp snarled at his visitor for failing to have any whisky with him.

By the time police reached the area to investigate, Sharp had long been buried.

Peace a woman's job, says Williams young nieces and nephews were killed by a runaway car whose terrorist driver had been shot by a British soldier, Williams and Corrigon finally said enough was enough.

"There comes a time when you have to stand up and say No. No more. Don't speak to me with a gun in your hand."

Williams said she was surprised by the response to the movement and shocked when she and Corrigon received the Nobel prize. She felt the honor was premature; they hadn't earned it, yet.

Coping with the international reknown has been ever more difficult. "It's like living in a goldfish bowl."

While she has quit the executive of the movement — she didn't like the bureaucracy and paperwork involved — she and Corrigan remain close friends, despite some press reports to the contrary.

Williams is encouraged a solution will be found.

The killings continue but at least there are no longer the indiscriminate bombings.

It will take years before peace returns and the grievances of the Catholic minority are satisfied.

"It's a slow process but normality is seeping back in. I think we've finally broken the barrier of fear. Fear is contagious, but so is courage."

Williams, whose mother was Catholic, father protestant, grandfather Jewish and who is married to an English Methodist, said the biggest problem is getting the Irish people to look to the future.

"The Irish have a tremendous habit of living in the past. They have long memories. To get them thinking about tomorrow is horrendous."

"The people can do it. It's like the story of the ant and the elephant. All you need is enough ants and you can move the elephant."

Hawaiian gypsies' curse rebounds

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Three Hawaiian gypsies have been charged with defrauding a Prince George widow of more than $100,000 in a fortune-telling scheme.

At a bail hearing Friday, Crown counsel said that the woman, described as being in her 40s, was told she would be cursed forever unless she followed her dead husband's instructions, as relayed through several persons.

Court was told the woman gave up a total of $106,000, $20,000 of which is listed in the charges as having changed hands in Canada. Police have recovered $9,400.

Charged are Tina-Maria Merino, David Merino and Nancy Merino, all of Hawaii.

Court was told that while the woman was on a vacation in Hawaii late last year, she met three persons who subsequently moved into her home here.

Bail was denied. A preliminary hearing will be held May 8.

All right, math fans, this is it.

Last Saturday I mentioned that back in 1871, when British Columbia was joining Confederation, Ottawa promised to pay the province $100,000 a year, in perpetuity, as compensation for land ceded to the new transcontinental railway.

B.C. never saw a penny of that money. But the 1871 Terms of Union are still on the lawbooks.

How much would Ottawa owe us if we charged a modest 10 per cent interest, compounded annually?

Last week I didn't have the answer. This week, thanks to Number-One Son's course in computer math, I do.

Brace yourselves.

Next May 16, 109 years after the Terms of Union were signed, the federal government would owe the province of British Columbia $35.7 billion.

To be exact: $35,742,359,352.

Wow!

Note to Finance Minister Hugh Curtis: When financial fantasies start creeping into real life, I find cold showers help.

Hands up everybody who remembers Dirty Tricks.

Very good.

Now hands up those who remember that the Social Credit Party, as a result of Dirty Tricks, established a special watchdog committee on ethics.

Not so good. Allow me to refresh your memories.

At the Socred convention last Fall, the following resolution was passed by a large majority:

"Whereas the British Columbia Social Credit Party was founded on, and is committed to, the highest ethical and moral principles;

"And whereas it is essential that these principles continue to stand foremost in all of our party's activities;

"Therefore be it resolved that the board of directors do forthwith appoint a Standing Committee on Ethics, composed of not less than three members, charged with the duty of ensuring that the policies and practices of the party and its members continue to be guided and measured by our founding principles;

"And with the approval of not less than two thirds of the board, act on and be given the mandate to dispense their authority on acts of an unethical conduct by any member of the British Columbia Social Credit Party."

Good, strong-sounding stuff. Delegates slapped each other on the back and went home, certain that their party's ethics would receive tender and loving care.

But they were wrong. The truth is, there is nobody minding the shop, ethically speaking.

Not only has the party ethics committee failed to operate, it has virtually failed to exist.

The former Socred MLA for Vancouver South, Gerry Strongman, was appointed chairman of the committee almost six months ago. Indeed he still is chairman. But no other members have ever been named. The committee doesn't meet, unless Strongman has taken up talking to himself.

Party President Bernie "Whistling" Smith has a curious explanation for this state of affairs:

The committee hasn't been fully formed because no question of ethics has arisen since the convention. Therefore there is no need for the committee. Should such a question arise, then the necessary members will be named and the committee will deal with it.

No ethical questions? What about the resignation of Dan Campbell for his failure to report $245,000 in election expenses? "There may have been mismanagement but it doesn't come under the category of ethics," says Smith.

Then how about all that nasty stuff left over from Dirty Tricks? "We're not talking about the past," says Smith.

He seems to have forgotten that Premier Bill Bennett proposed setting up an ethics committee to specifically clean up after the Dirty Tricks mess and to act as a watchdog to make sure it doesn't happen again.

Bennett has an even more convenient memory. He can't remember having anything to do with establishing the committee. "The party executive did it. Talk to them."

So much for protection of "the highest ethical and moral principles."

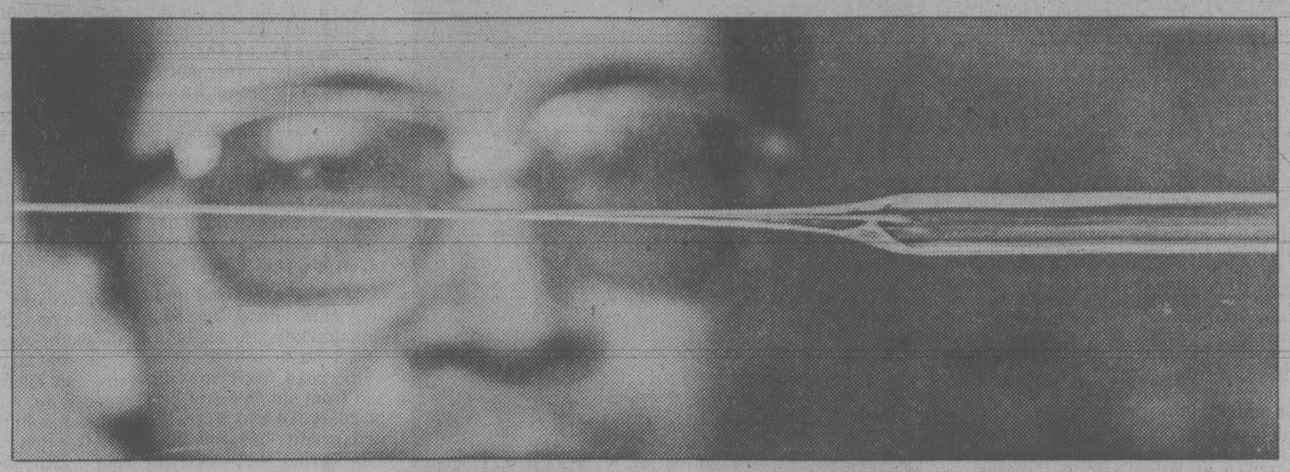
The legislature now has spent 37 hours and 38 minutes, spread over 14 sitting days, examining the premier's estimates. Are they any closer to being passed? Not on you nellie.

The betting is the NDP intends to spend at least a couple more weeks bashing away at Premier Bill before they let him loose.

As Winston Churchill might have put it: "Never have so many said so much about so little."



Research scientist shows how hair-thin optical fibre is stretched from hot quartz rod

Glass rings in new era for phones

By AB KENT

Everyone knows how a pair of fine copper wires carry a telephone conversation.

But so can threads of glass.

Magical as it seems, glass fibres soon will usher in an astonishing phase of communications expansion. In the first step they will carry one leg of long distance calls between Victoria and the mainland.

Over all, the days of copper transmission line seem numbered.

Thick bundles of copper wires make up the laterals and trunk lines of telephone and telegraph companies, slung ponderously overhead from pole to pole, buried in fat underground ducts or sunk on seabottoms in vast oceanic networks.

Clearly, the rising demand for telephones and circuits for other communication services, means more pairs of wires, more bundles, more costly cable systems.

Technological nations already have tied up incredible quantities of copper for history's most-wired society. To go on adding copper wire to the system will effectively bring it to a standstill.

Alternatives like co-axial cable and microwave have their limitations; broadcasting is a shrinking medium as airwaves become increasingly crowded.

Fibre optics appear to be the right solution at the right time.

"You're going to reach the point where you won't be putting any more copper into the ground," predicts B.C. Telephone Co. engineer Jack Nellist, of Vancouver.

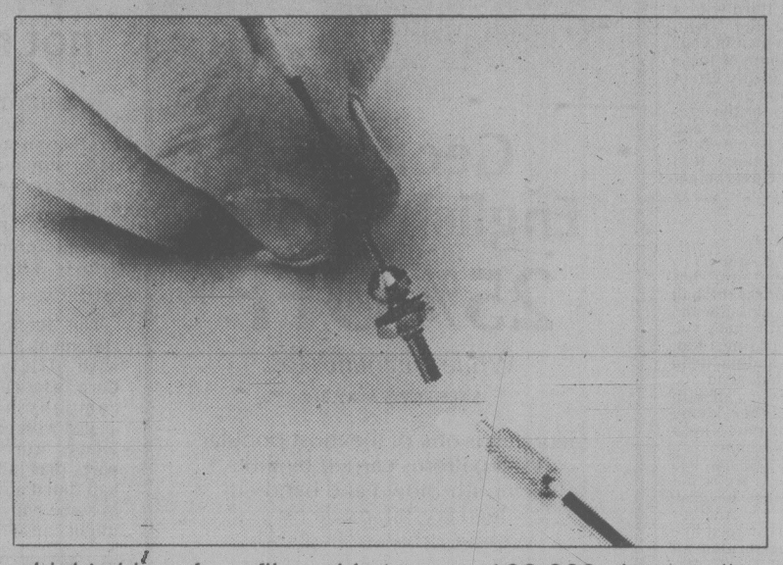
Although a little-developed medium for transmitting signals of various kinds, the slender thread of pure, inexpensive silica glass promises to be the miracle of 1980s communications.

Silica, unlike copper, is among the earth's most plentiful elements.

It is fitting that Victoria, where the province's first telephone company was founded 100 years ago next month, is to have the first operational fibre optic transmission cable.

A $4 million start will connect B.C. Tel's central office on downtown Yates Street with a digital microwave terminal at Smith's Hill 2.9 km away on the Victoria-Saanich boundary, to be ready next year.

That will augment and greatly improve long distance capacity between Victoria and Vancouver, in which mountaintop digital radio transmitters are also used.



Light shines from fibre able to carry 100,000 phone calls

Until recently fibre optic strands were little more than a novelty, a hobbyist's gimmick to bend light rays, or used in very specialized medical instruments allowing surgeons to peer into live organs.

Now, with the help of laser light, a fibre optic might be envisaged as a thread from the pointed end of a cornucopia crammed full of communications signals funneled into a single stream of impulses.

One pair of hair-like glass fibres a scant 50 microns in diameter, wrapped up in a cable about the thickness of a lead pencil will be able to transmit an amazing 672 voice channels simultaneously for telephone trunks.

Copper pairs are limited to a mere 24 channels when used for trunk lines.

Potentially, a fibre optic cable fed into each household will bring everything from telephone conversations and television programs to computer banking; an unlimited variety of information systems — like university courses, stock quotations, monitoring and security services, weather reports and entertainment directories — to the earliest and latest in published material, all to be had by simply tuning in.

Three technologies blend in the fibre optics revolution: electronics, laser light, and optical glass extrusion.

A voice or numerical impulse representing computer data can easily be converted to an electronic signal, a commonplace in the modern world. Transporting that signal by laser beam is also accomplished quite easily.

Laser light is a red emission concentrated into a narrow beam more powerful than sunlight, projectible over relatively short distances with extreme accuracy.

Electromagnetic waves, such as carried by telephone wire, may be pulsed along this laser beam, received by a photodiode terminal and changed back into audible sound. Moreover, a number of different frequencies may be carried simultaneously.

But the hazards of such a system are apparent and render it impractical for network communications.

Enter the fibre optic.

This hairstrand of optical quality glass can carry a fine-focussed laser beam a considerable distance and also is capable of handling many tranmissions at one time.

No more worry about conduit capacity, or new buildings blocking off microwave transmissions. Existing underground conduits will be able to handle bundles of fibre optic cables for decades to come.

Unwanted background noise also will be eliminated. Being non-metallic the glass fibre can't pick up static from electric power lines or magnetic fields or cross-chatter from adjoining circuits.

If a conduit vault becomes flooded in a rainstorm and moisture seeps into a cable covering, service will not be interrupted or impaired by shorting or electrolysis as frequently occurs with copper conductors.

Cost estimates for fibre distribution cables in the 1980s are just a fraction of the price of placing either copper pairs or coaxial cables.

Nellist, B.C. Tel's general transmission engineer, is enthusiastic about the fibre optic, and thinks its future is limited only by imagination.

He is confident the Smith's Hill cable will prove superior even to the successful experimental link between two lower mainland telephone offices which he evaluated. That was a 7.4 km fibre optic cable, still in use and carrying 48 conversations, although it has capacity for 672.

There will be 12 optical fibres in the Smith's Hill cable, giving it a potential capacity of 4,032 circuits, although only four fibres will be used initially for a possible 1,344 channels.

Nellist further predicts fibre optics will go into homes within a decade if development remains at its current pace and the cost difference between copper and fibre rises.

"The more fibre manufacturered, the cheaper it becomes," he said.

In world terms, Canada is ahead of the U.S. in developing full digital fibre networks.

Nellist recently returned from Saudi Arabia where he was consulted on the new technology for possible long distance communications. Service at present is by radio transmission, but frequency congestion is a growing hindrance.

Bell Canada also is experimenting with fibre optics. They did a short field trial in Montreal about two years ago and are planning some trunk systems.

Japan is probably the most advanced in the technology although important work is being done in Belgium and the UK. The Japanese are experimenting with an extremely fine optical fibre using a much higher wave length for impulses, which allows up to 30 km between amplification points.

Alternative to jail sought for juveniles

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The Victoria youth detention centre on Pembroke is crowded with juvenile lawbreakers — most of them from the British Columbia mainland — and there's no need to lock up half of them, several experts on troubled youth said Friday at a city hall press conference.

The family court committee, an intermunicipal body of aldermen and social workers who supervise the centre, said 50 per cent of the kids in custody have not committed serious violent crimes and are not a danger to other people.

The present overcrowding of juvenile facilities here and elsewhere in B.C. — blamed by the government on a recent judicial order removing from the law the discretionary criteria regarding who is to be incarcerated — is unnecessary, they claim.

The committee, chaired by Victoria Ald. Gretchen Brewin, meets Attorney-General Allan Williams next Wednesday to discuss the problem in Victoria and to ask for alternative programs to detention.

Family court judges are jailing juveniles because they haven't been offered enough alternatives, said David Turner, chairman of the capital region justice council.

The committee wants the activation of a body called the B.C. Youth Programs Committee, which was outlined in the 1977 B.C. Corrections Act amendments but has yet to be established.

Its job would be to create alternative programs in the home communities of juvenile offenders, thus ending the present situation at the Victoria youth detention centre where most of the kids are hundreds of miles from home.

Tony Gascoyne, secretary of the family court committee, said a study of 19 offenders serving time in the centre from mid-December to mid-April showed only four were from the Capital Regional District, for which the centre was originally designed.

Four more were from Vancouver Island but 11 were from the mainland, as far away as Dawson Creek, and Prince George.

He said there is little planning for a young offender while he is in custody and nothing for him when he or she is released. By the time he has finished his sentence he has lost touch with his home.

Rowdy teen beachparty too much for police

Public pressure for police in Saanich to beef up their beach patrols is mounting following a huge rowdy party in Mount Douglas Park overnight.

A police spokesman said several hundred youths congregated on the beach and the din they created could be heard six blocks away.

Officers were unable to break up the crowd because of its size. The best they could do was control youths entering and leaving the parking area.

Seven youths were taken into custody for breach of peace. Because the Saanich lockup only holds five prisoners and the city lockup was filled to capacity, two of the youths had to be let go early to make room for the others.

Officers seized about 30 cases of beer and a large quantity of liquor.

Last year the police board declined to approve a $20,000 request by police chief Bob Peterson for beach patrols. It was too costly, the board felt.

Police said at the time they expected there would be trouble.

"Sure it is expensive," the spokesman said. "But the public wants something done. The people living down there have their weekends ruined throughout the spring and summer."

Empress not up to regal taste

The famed Empress hotel has been struck off the list of places where Princess Alexandra will dine during her royal visit here May 2.

A routine inspection by federal inspectors ruled that kitchen facilities were inadequate to meet their standards if royalty is to eat there.

The cousin of Queen Elizabeth was scheduled to attend a civic luncheon at The Empress on May 2.

"It's a very, very minor problem," said Simon Deane, the hotel's director of marketing and sales.

"It's something I think the new inspector thought we could rectify quickly."

Don Wakelyn, director of public health for the region, said it is routine practice for Ottawa to make a federal inspection of facilities in connection with royal visits.

"We hope people won't make a mountain out of a molehill about this because it's a routine matter."

As far as local inspections are concerned, he said, he felt there should be no distinction between royal dining and someone dropping in for a beer. The same standards should apply.

He could not comment further, he said, because it was standard practice to have confidentiality in connection with inspections.

Most of Princess Alexandra's meals will be served at Government House during her stay. Kitchen facilities there have passed federal inspection.

Mayne wants a break for its nurse

The delivery of health care on Mayne Island has never been better since nurse practitioner Gina Dingwell arrived on the scene eight months ago.

There's only one slight problem.

Dingwell is on call 24-hours a day seven days a week.

The Island residents feel that is too much to ask of anyone and, as a consequence, are pressing the Capital Region District to provide a relief nurse to handle the workload on weekends and holiday periods.

They aren't having much success.

The CRD has steadfastly maintained there aren't sufficient funds available.

But the Islanders won't take no for an answer.

Today at the annual meeting of the board of the Mayne Island Health Centre Association, they'll be plotting their next course of action.

The man in the hot seat is Dr. Allan Arneil, head of the region's community health services.

Arneil, who is attending the meeting, says that while he can sympathize with the Islanders' needs, they are fortunate in having the services they have.

Their health clinic, built by the Islanders five years ago with provincial help, is a model for other health centres in the province.

He also points out that while Galiano and Pender both have resident doctors, Mayne is the only Gulf Island with a resident nurse on duty five days a week.

Dingwell visits the other two islands and Saturna (which has no resident medical person) on a regular basis.

Fred Flick, former treasurer of the clinic, says that because nearly three-quarters of the Mayne Island's 600 permanent residents are elderly there is a great need to have a nurse on duty seven days a week.

"What's the good of having a model clinic if it isn't worked properly," he says. "If we can't get help I fear we will lose our nurse and it will be extra difficult to get another in her place."

Echoes resident Denyce Fragomeni: "We got a fantastic person now. We're prepared to fight to keep her."

Dingwell was unavailable for comment.

Washing those heirlooms

By MAY MacLEAN

Today I would like to say a word of advice on the storing and care of crochet bedspreads, or for that matter any lovely thing which has been hand-made.

Several reader's have written to say they have inherited a lovely crochet bedspread, but having been stored over the years, it has lost its whiteness and has taken on a yellow look.

There are several pre-soak enmzyme powders on the markets these days, and I have found these quite good for removing soil from old pieces of embroidery. To soak a crochet bedspread, use the bath tub, so that the water can easily penetrate all the fibres of the crochet. An overnight soak would be a good idea — then several rinses of cool clear water until all residue of the soap or dertergent has been removed.

When I was a little girl in England, I remember they used to use a blueing agent in the final rinse so the sheets would have that very-white look.

A crocheted bedspread, when wet is very difficult and heavy to handle, so have a large bowl in which to place the spread once you have squeezed out all the water possible.

Several large bath towels are now needed to roll the spread in, to take up as much moisture as possible.

After that, lay the spread out again on clean white towels on a flat surface to dry, but never in the sun. You may have to lay the spread out double; if so, keep turning it over, so it dries evenly.

Crocheted tablecloths can be washed in the same way as well as doilies, but these aren't as hard to dry as a crocheted a bedspread.

After the drying, great care should be taken in gently ironing the article on the wrong side. Rather than move the iron along the crochet (you might snag the stitches with the tip of the iron), lift the iron and gently press as you work over the surface.

If you are storing the spread in a trunk, there is no need to press it first; simply roll it in a clean white sheet, and store flat. But please remember to refold it about every six months.

I once saw an exquisite embroidered tablecloth which had been folded in a trunk over many years, resulting in the breakdown of the fibres along the creases, especially where there was a double corner. It was such a shame!

I always make a point of refolding my linens every three months or so to avoid such a catastrophe.

I believe that beautiful things should be used, not kept hidden away. Some of my older pieces I keep for special occasions, but our families are special, too — although it does entail extra work.

This week's pattern is a beautiful counted cross-stitch pattern worked on an even-weave, white, embroidery linen with Clark's Anchor Stranded Cotton. Counted cross-stitch is enjoying great popularity in the U.S. right now. Perhaps you have seen it illustrated in some women's magazines?

This week's pattern makes attractive tablecloth

Copycat cancer not risky

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, seeking to calm fears about possible cancer risks from using copying machines, said Friday that based on current information "the public should not be alarmed."

The agency issued the statement after a meeting with officials of Xerox Corp. who complained the company has been besieged with calls from customers worried about reports that laboratory tests had found a chemical used in some copying machines might cause cancer.

The Birks Sweetheart
ROSE RING
In gold, with a diamond at heart
$350.
Truly far below its current market value!

THE RING.
Inspired by the miniature perfection of a sweetheart rose, our ring is the essence of romance . . . delicately feminine in design, but with a presence that will win admiring glances.

Created in our own Birks Jewel Studios with tender loving care, its gold petals were meticulously sculptured to provide a perfect nestling place for the white, full-cut Birks diamond.

We used our precious 14kt. yellow gold generously to make it what it is—a sweetheart of a ring!

THE PRICE.
We were determined to make this a ring which could be enjoyed by as many of our customers as possible—at a price that would mean real savings.

Several factors made it possible. First, our bulk buying method enables us to purchase diamonds at low prices. Then we cut our normal mark-up down substantially.

The result? A beautiful ring—and a real bargain at $350.

wonderful world of animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dear Dr. Miller: Muck and Meyer, my salamanders, won't eat their vegetables. Is this bad for them?—R.G.

Dear R.G.: If Muck and Meyer have made it to adulthood, and assuming they're eating other foods, you can skip their vegetables. They're carniverous critters consuming, depending on their size and species, anything from bees and beetles to crayfish and minnows to snails and spiders to varying types of worms and worm-like offerings.

Dear Dr. Miller: We have a parrot three and a half years old. We believe it to be a female, but it could be that other sex. She's OK now but two weeks ago we tried to give her some blackstrap molasses for constipation. We ended up getting molasses all over her feathers and all over us. What a mess! It worked though.

She hasn't been constipated since. Is there anything easier to give if she gets constipated again?—T.K.

Dear T.K.: Parrots aren't prone to constipation, particularly if they're getting adequate fluids. If it's a recurring problem, one cause could be junk foods instead of regular parrot rations. Those rations should probably include fruit. But this apparent constipation may be something else entirely, and should it recur, the safest course would be not to try another round of forced-fed laxatives of any kind but, instead, to pack your parrot off to a bird-oriented veterinarian for a more precise diagnosis and more specific recommendations.

Dear Dr. Miller: Trixie is 8. She hasn't had a heat period in two years and we thought she'd gotten tired of all that stuff. But, lo and behold, I think she's coming into heat again! Do you consider an 8-year-old dog under such circumstances safe?—E.Y.

Dear E.Y.: An 8-year-old dog could be "safe" in regard to a lot of things, but you can't completely count Trixie out as far as pregnancy is concerned. Not at least if she's had any litters in the last two years, and, if you're calling a really long shot, not at all. You should also be considering Trixie's personal safety since the mating game might not be nearly as much fun as formerly (if there was a formerly) and could even be dangerous for her, depending on her poochy partner. Should she become pregnant at this age, she's certain to be more prone to pregnancy and parturation problems, some of which would be life-threatening. Considering everything, the best way to keep Trixie safe at this port would be to keep her out of circulation as far as male canines are concerned.

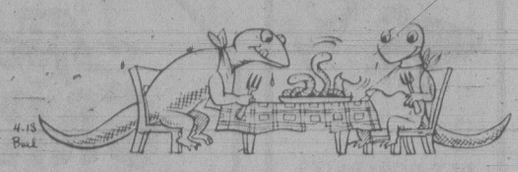
Dear Dr. Miller: I'm wondering if I ought to break off with one of my boyfriends. You see, he gave me this snake as a pet.

Actually, it was a big beautiful snake and I didn't mind it. I was going to keep it until I noticed it had this big triangular head. Then I insisted he get it out of here. I wonder now if he doesn't really hate me because I'm sure that was a poisonous snake. It was, wasn't it? I know it wasn't a rattlesnake. It didn't have any rattles on one end, but it had that head just like one, and I know that's the way you can tell poisonous snakes.—F.M.

Dear F.M.: You should seek some other columnist's advice regarding your snake-toting boyfriend. As far as the snake itself is concerned, there are indeed many poisonous triangular-headed snakes including rattlesnakes. Many others of somewhat similar appearance are not poisonous. Conversely, the majority of the narrow-headed snakes are non-poisonous, but this description also fits cobras, corral snakes, mambas and other very lethal cousins.

In any event, when there's any doubt about a snake's capabilities or intentions, the best policy is to leave it alone.



Beer strike met head on

DUBLIN (UPI) — In a unique display of Irish logic, thousands of Irishmen crowded Dublin pubs today pouring down gallons of Guinness beer in anticipation of a threatened shortage of the famous dark brew.

The Irish, who drink more than 2 million pints of the stout a day, face a drought of their favorite drink, because a strike by 250 craftsmen has drastically cut production at the Guinness brewery.

"Its like a Christmas holiday weekend," pub owner Patrick McKieonan said early today. "They want as much as possible before the awful day when the pumps run dry."

Guinness officials have warned pub owners of possible rationing.

"Supplies from the brewery are already disrupted and we are unable to meet customers orders except to a limited extent," a spokesman said.

abby

Dear Abby:

This is for Virgo who couldn't decide whether to marry the "mature, responsible, hard-working man" because he didn't have a college degree (she did).

Someone should tell this snob that college definitely does not make the person. My husband makes a very good living, but he didn't even finish high school. I am certainly not against higher education; however, a degree doesn't automatically ensure that a person is mature and well-rounded. I know some college graduates who don't have sense enough to come in out of the rain.

I can only hope that this man who is "mature, responsible, hard-working and earns $35,000 a year at only a job — not a profession" finds himself a woman more deserving of him.

Scorpio

Dear Abby:

Our 41-year-old daughter still lives at home. She never married. The problem is she thinks she is an artist. She attended some art classes, but she is far from good. In fact, to be honest with you, she's pretty bad. I don't claim to be an authority on art, but I know what I don't like.

About three years ago she painted some pictures, had them framed and hung them in the living room. What a collection! Abraham Lincoln, Groucho Marx, Mona Lisa and Woody Allen!

Abby, these ugly, amateurish paintings have been staring me in the face for about as long as I can stand it. I would like to take them down, but I don't know how to go about it without hurting her feelings.

Mother

Dear Mother:

Tell your daughter that you want to give the place a new look, so you've decided to rearrange the furnishings and wash, repaint and paper the walls. Then take down Abe, Groucho, Mona and Woody and leave them down!

Dear Abby:

Last year my sister and her husband came to visit us. They are good company, about our age (mid-50s) and are about as well-off financially as we are. (Maybe better.)

They stayed at our home for 10 days, during which time we paid for all their entertainment, which included Disneyland, sight-seeing, Universal Studios tour, restaurants nearly every night, and even a side trip to Las Vegas. They never offered to pay a thing. They must think that because we live in California, we are rich.

They wrote to tell us that they had such a fabulous time last year they're coming again. Abby, we don't mind putting them up and feeding them at our house, but we can't afford to give them a repeat performance of last year's entertainment, which is probably what they expect.

My husband says I should write my sister and give her the facts before they start out. Would that be proper?

Strapped Not Cheap

Dear Not Cheap:

Not only would it be proper, I think it's essential.

Dear Abby:

The letter from the woman who never knew how to answer people who asked if her late-in-life baby was an accident, brought back memories.

We had two grown children and nine grandchildren when I became pregnant. I was 45, and my husband was 48. Many people asked me if the baby was an accident. (They still do.) I always said, "He may not have been planned but he was a gift from God — and that is no accident."

Blessed

Avoid numbers game on blood pressure

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

In a shopping mall I recently passed a long line of people waiting to pay 50 cents to have their blood pressure taken. The readings were made by two people whose white uniforms and stethoscopes gave the impression of medical authenticity.

After the blood pressure readings were taken, each person was given a card with his own "high" and "low" blood pressure readings. Some left the area with a look of satisfaction, others in a state of confusion, and some with a look of despair.

A thriving business has been flourishing — based on the curiosity that people seem to have about blood pressure numbers. There is a strange fascination about these numbers, but they have meaning only to doctors. For the blood pressure numbers are only a fraction of the information that a doctor accumulates during a general physical examination. When all the information is compiled, the blood pressure readings become an excellent index of the condition of the heart, lungs, blood vessels, kidneys and hormone balance in the body.

There are two blood pressure numbers. Both are important. The first number, the higher one, is called the "systolic" blood pressure. This measures the pressure in the blood vessels, especially in the arteries, at the time that the heart pumps blood into them.

The second, the lower number, is called the "diastolic." This indicates the pressure in the blood vessels in between each beat of the heart. The lower, the diastolic pressure, may perhaps be somewhat more significant.

A single reading, done haphazardly when passing a blood pressure booth, has virtually no meaning. People who are basically concerned about their blood pressure may find that there is a sudden rise by the very act of having it taken by a stranger. Even doctors who have been taking care of patients for a long period of time make sure that their patients rest and quiet down for a period of time before taking their blood pressure. Otherwise, there may be a rise of "numbers" that does not really reflect the true state of the blood pressure. Even a slight emotional upset, or period of anxiety, may cause a temporary rise in the numbers.

A single stamped-out reading can serve only to cause emotional distress, rather than to allay it. Numbers are meaningful only when they are compared to previous readings made by doctors who can interpret their significance.

What happens to these people who learn their blood pressure readings for 50 cents in a shopping mall? Do they know if they require treatment? If they are already taking high blood pressure pills, do they know if they should be increased or decreased? The numbers game is a poor way to sidetrack the need for a doctor's supervision.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of the Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

common cents

"More women and girls buy these boys' shirts for themselves than for boys to wear," said the owner of a boys' clothing shop. He was referring to the classic oxford cloth, button-down collar shirt made by the same shirt company for years and still selling (in many parts of the country) for about $13.50, less than a similar shirt in the girls' departments.

The fact that some recycling companies again boosted prices for old newspapers may not interest you, but other uses for the throw-away might. Save on cleaning cloths and paper towels by polishing windows, mirrors, tinware, chrome coffee pot or tea pot, brass items with crumpled newspapers.

At the fabric store, the saleslady said cottons were coming in at higher prices every week, but polyesters still haven't jumped much because they aren't as popular as they used to be on the fashion scene. Higher crude oil prices should change that soon, she added. (Buy now, sew later?)

It isn't necesary to pay a repair shop to replace the belt or brushes on your upright vacuum cleaner. If you can slip off a cracked belt and ease out the roller brush, you can replace them with new ones from the repair shop. (Incidentally, before you consider buying a new cleaner, check its power. Many oldies are much more powerful, said a carpet salesman.)

Moving plants with you? Give it careful thought

gardening
jack beastall

For sentimental reasons we often desire to take garden plants with us when we move from one property to another.

This leads to the frequent question "can I move a shrub four feet high (or a tree eight feet high)? When the name of the tree or shrub is known, it has a bearing on the answer:

Essentially, the question is: Can I move a plant of a specified size, indicating gardeners feel that height, or size determines whether or not a plant can be successfully moved.

In reality, the only limitation is the gardener's inability to handle large specimens without suitable equipment. The many commercial plantings which have been made around town in the last 10 years are proof that plants of any size can be moved successfully.

More important than size is the preparation that has been carried out in advance. When a nurseryman is asked if a certain plant can be moved, his thoughts immediately turn to the roots, the unseen parts underground, rather than to the height of the visible portion above ground.

When constantly handling plants in, and out, of the ground, one becomes familar with the different types of root systems and their ability to repair damaged parts.

Even home gardeners who frequently move plants from one spot to another in the garden acquire a sense of what is likey to move successfully, and they become the envy of their friends and neighbors.

It is not generaly known by home gardens that plants growing in a commercial nursery are regularly lifted and set back into the soil in order to build, and maintain, a complete and compact root system which can be transferred at any time to a customer's garden. Mechanical equipment is often used for this purpose to lessen both labor and costs, but it is an essential part of nursery management.

When a tree or a shrub is left undisturbed for a number of years the roots spread outwards and downwards, most of which are cut off when the plant is moved. Preparing a home garden plant for moving consists of severing these roots over a period of time and allowing new roots and feeding roots to form before the plant is moved.

The normal procedure is along this line; first mark a circle around the plant at the extreme outmost spread of foliage or branches. Then in spring when growth becomes active, open a trench beyond this line for not more than one-quarter the circumference and sever all roots found in this trench. On small plants this is modified to thrusting a spade deeply in the soil to cut the roots.

When the trench is used it is filled immediately with good screened compost (mixed with sand if necessary) to provide suitable soil conditions for the mass of fine roots that will develop.

In early September repeat the operation on another quarter of the circumference, then before the month is out repeat the operation on another quarter of the circumference. September is an important growth month as gardeners have discovered. The following spring another quarter is treated, and the final quarter in September. The plant will be ready to move the following spring or fall.

We have gradually disconnected the plant from its feeding and its anchor roots, and built a new set of feeding roots closer in that can be lifted with the plant when moved to its new location.

Unfortunately, the sale or purchase of a property is usually decided on short notice, certainly not three years in advance to allow the necessary time to prepare an established plant for moving successfully.

It is not a question of the size of plant that can be moved, but whether anything will be gained by attempting to move an established plant on short notice. As long as the plant remains where it is there will be pleasure for those who purchase the property, and we have the satisfaction of knowing it was our efforts and care which made that pleasure possible. If the plant is moved and fails to survive there is no satisfaction for either party.

If the reason for moving is sentiment, it would be wise to root a few cuttings, if it is a shrub, rather than attempt to move the original. A cutting makes a good little plant in a couple of years and will be exactly like the original. If it is a tree, it would be better to buy a small duplicate of transplanting size. A two-year-old tree becomes established faster than a four-year-old. Planted side by side in the same conditions the two-year-old tree will be stronger and larger than the four-year-old tree after two more years of growth. And if you have to pay for moving, the total cost will be considerably less.

Every case must be judged on its merit, but generally speaking gardeners who try to move large plants for sentimental reasons rarely find the satisfaction they were seeking.

Small shrubs, those which have not been in the garden for more than two or three years, can usually be moved successfully on short notice, although some have definite periods during which the moving should be done.

Work for week

Pinch out growing tips of fuchsias for business in baskets, pots or containers on balconies, patios.

Plant out sweet peas stated indoors or in cold-frame. Provide climbing needs at once to encourage development. Teepees of canes, or a screen of wire if the plants are not in hot sun may be used. Both plastic and wire become too hot for cool growth plants if in full sun.

When buying cabbage plants, get them into soil quickly, not forgetting the dusting of lime for each to help prevent clubroot disease. This killing of cabbage-related plants is so easy to prevent but difficult to control once it gets into the soil.

Roots of purchased plants must be kept cool and covered with wet material until replanted, even a light piece of burlap damped with water. Spray the plants with water after planting, and shade if necessary from hot sn.

Make first sowings of the cool-weather vegetables if not already in — peas, lettuce, swiss chard, spinach, stump-rooted carrots. Shade rows with pieces of shiplap leaning on small stakes to prevent drying by sun. Sow as thinly as possible for faster growth with less thinning. Sow small rows at two-week intervals; dampen surface to assist germination.

The rain in Spain gets help

GENEVA (Reuter) — Eight countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union, are co-operating in a rain-making project in Spain which could help alleviate the problem of drought in some subtropical countries.

Aksel Wiin-Nielsen, Danish secretary general of the World Meteorological Organization told a news conference the research project near Valladolid, Spain, would help determine whether cumulus cloud formations were suitable for rain-making experiments.

He said that after tests this year and next, WMO would decide whether to launch a four-year experiment in making rain by seeding clouds with silver iodide.

Learn Short Cut Sewing™

Only at Stretch & Sew Fabrics Centre can you learn the Short Cut Sewing techniques of the new Ann Person Method of sewing. It's so simple and easy you'll be sewing beautiful clothes in one-half the time of ordinary sewing. Come, learn short-cut sewing and in eight easy lessons you will make:

Class 1 A quick T-shirt top with crew neck or turtleneck.
Class 2 Marvelous pants and skirt that are adjusted to fit you perfectly.
Class 3 Versatile raglan sleeve dress with square neck or turtleneck.
Class 4 The once-difficult bust dart alteration and the zipper without a seam.
Class 5 Sweaters — cardigan, pullover or vest with crossed-over V-neckline.
Class 6 The simply smashing tab front dress.
Class 7 Classic jacket with set-in sleeves and a neat, straight skirt.
Class 8 A great swimsuit that custom-fits you, and an adorable cover-up.

Handicap workshop gets lease

The Capital Regional Association for the Mentally Handicapped has received approval for the first step of its plan to improve the quantity and quality of service it provides for the handicapped.

The Greater Victoria School Board's planning committee agreed in principal with a request to give the association a long-term lease on the building which houses Sentinnel Workshop.

Executive director of the association Ralph Vipond told the committee that the association's building program would increase the number of handicapped using the workshop.

Vipond said the association's intention is to bring the people currently at Langwood Workshop in Langford in to Sentinnel.

Earlier this year Langwood was threatened with closure because the association said it was not prepared to continue to pick up the deficit it incurred each year.

At the enlarged Sentinnel Workshop, Vipond said, Langwood's more severely handicapped people could be offered better programs.

The association hopes to carry out the renovations by using proceeds from a fund-raising drive rather than by borrowing but, Vipond said, it needs the board's agreement on a long-term lease before it commits itself to the major expenditures required.

The board's committee agreed in principal because it saw no need for Sentinnel and its two-acre site in the foreseeable future.

Lottery grants top $4M November to March 31

Lottery Fund grants totally $4,223,478 have been paid during the period November 1 to March 31, the provincial secretary's office has announced.

Included in these grants are two transfers. One of $982,210 to the B.C. Cultural Fund and $1.8 million to the B.C. Heritage Trust.

Individual grants range from $100,000 to the Vancouver Centennial Museum to help produce a "Look of Music" exhibition to $300 for a shuffleboard for the Senior Citizens Association in Prince George.

Grants totalling aproximately $199,300 were given to the following Victoria based groups: Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, $6,000 for lighting equipment; Saanich Indian School Board, $20,000 for equipment; Sooke New Horizons Activity Club, $12,000 for a seniors' bus; Fernwood Community Centre, $16,749.47 for construction; Saanich Horticultural Society, $75,000 for development of a horticultural centre; Victoria Kiwanis Wheels program, $7,000 for equipment; Sooke and District Parks and Recreation Commission, $10,000 for arena seating; Victoria City Rowing Club, $10,000 for equipment; Victoria Society for the Recreation of Handicapped Persons, $10,000; the Skylarks Choir, $1,625.93 for costumes; Mount St. Mary Hospital, $1,200 for hydraulic lift on handicapped bus; Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, $17,500 for aquistion of porcelain collection; Sidney Little League, $12,000 for development of playing field.

TREAT YOUR GUESTS to a SALMON FISHING TRIP with Magna Charters Limited
(and come at half price yourself)
Tired of taking guests on the usual round of tourist attractions?
They will enjoy, and long remember, a trip on our roomy, comfortable, 44-foot, tri-cabin cruiser with two skipper-guides aboard to help beginners, rig the rods, net and clean the salmon.
Give them the experience of seeing the electronic fish-finder at work, the thrill of a Pacific Salmon on the line and the chance of seeing killer whales, sea lions and otters in their natural state. All this in our beautiful ocean scenery which cries out for their cameras.
Our trips, early morning and afternoon, last a full four hours.
Tackle and bait are free, as also a constant pot of coffee.
We are moored at Pedder Bay Marina, close to the best fishing grounds, a pleasant 35-minute run from downtown.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, April 20, 1980

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on basic values, security, territory, definition of meanings, terms. Pisces, Virgo natives figure prominently. Check small print, look behind scenes, perceive motives. Someone is trying to tell you something. You will comprehend!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emphasis on collecting, analyzing data — putting information to practical use. Older relative, perhaps a Capricorn, talks of long-term investment or loan. Keep priorities in focus. Maintain emotional balance, avoid spreading efforts — and money — too thin.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish assignment — deal with Libra persons. In any speculative matter, stick with number 9. Emphasis on locating lost articles, collecting debts, filing papers, adding items to special hobby. Cycle remains high — your hunch is valid.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Moon in your sign — be self-assertive, welcome new contacts, fresh concepts. Make personal appearances, wear bright colors, trust your own judgment. Take initiative and independent course. Timing favors your efforts. A Leo could help you feel more financially secure.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent on special groups, clubs, institutions and hospitals. You could be temporarily confined. Strive to regain sense of purpose, direction. Cancer, Aquarius persons could play significant roles. A barrier is lifted. You gain spiritual insight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Attend social affair, expand horizons, open lines of communication to Gemini and Sagittarius individuals. Wish will be fulfilled. Yes, do plan on making artistic purchase! Long-distance call aids in boosting morale.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasis on honor, obligations, special procedures, making room at the top. Aquarius, Cancer, Scorpio persons figure in exciting scenario. One in authority asks you to review and revise. Be co-operative without losing meat of project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Write, communicate, decide important issues with member of opposite sex. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Spotlight on potential, publications, long-range projects, philosophy, religion and significant legal decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be aware of budget, costs, necessities and luxuries. Dig beneath superficial indications, explanations. Mystery is solved with co-operation of family member. Beautify surroundings, remember special occasion or anniversary.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent on legal terminology, public responses to your efforts, explanations. Maintain low profile, avoid confrontations, make concessions to mate or partner. Deal with Pisces, Virgo natives. Insist on realistic agreement connected with special property, sales, territorial rights.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Weight of obligations — past and present — is felt. You learn what is practical as contrasted to fantasy. A powerful ally appears on scene. You gain access to information previously restricted, confidential or out-of-reach.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Something akin to public acclaim could come your way. Accent on style, distribution, communication, change, variety of sensations and appeal to members of opposite sex. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently. Young person helps brighten day.

IF APRIL 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are due to make significant changes in lifestyle — domestic situation gets adjusted and there could be a move in connection with residence. Much of this comes into focus during September. In June, travel and social activity are featured. In August, a summer romance is highlighted. Cancer, Capricorn persons play important roles in your life. You are sensitive, emotional, moody and loyal where family members are concerned. You constantly make resolutions concerning food and diet. You know what you should do, but you do not always act in most beneficial manner to yourself.

Astrological Forecast for Monday, April 21, 1980

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could be inextricably involved in special relationship, hobby or creative endeavor. Cancer, Leo, Capricorn persons figure prominently. Accent on enthusiasm, speculation, appeal to young persons, including children. Make the change!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can successfully complete important transaction. Don't sell yourself short. You do possess something of value. Others know it and you should also be aware of it. Aries, Libra persons figure in scenario. Get professional appraisal.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Highlight greater independence of thought, action. Get to heart of matters, face issues as they exist. Emphasis on ideas, inquiries, short trips and relatives who ask and answer questions. Leo, Aquarius individuals play prominent roles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do plenty of testing, checking and get verification concerning payments and collections. Protect valuables. Take nothing for granted where costs are concerned. It is possible to rise above petty annoyances. Know it and do so.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Restrictions are removed — you have greater freedom of thought and action. Broaden base of operations. Look beyond the immediate, perceive potential. Cycle is high and you will have cause for celebration. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Family member confides secret. Be discreet, analytical. Avoid self-righteous attitude. Strive for renewal of domestic harmony. Gain emotional second wind. It may be necessary to dismantle project in order to rebuild on more solid structure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pleasure principle is emphasized. Accent on repayment of loan, expression of appreciation by one who is ready to return a favor. Written material aids in making wish come true. Romantic interlude is featured. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure in scenario.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on advancement, bringing goals into focus. One who "pulls strings" could become a valuable ally. Taurus, Libra and another Scorpio figure prominently. Ambition is realized if you are realistic. A special, civic honor could be on agenda.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on communication, journey, fulfillment of aspiration. Catch up on correspondence. Be "in touch" with one at a distance. Pisces, Virgo individuals play key roles. Long-range plans command attention. One who aided you in past makes reappearance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Delve beneath surface indications. You can gain access to data which leads to solid profit. Know it and proceed accordingly. One you are "involved with" reveals financial status. Another Capricorn, a Cancer and a Leo figure in scenario.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Ignore those who urge you to leave secure position in favor of speculative venture. Be aware of legal implications, rights and permissions. Aries, Libra persons are in picture. You win by finishing what you started.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Low-key approach brings desired results. Check Aquarius message for valuable hint. Get together with co-workers, others who share basic concerns. You could become an integral part of unique organization. Be cooperative, but maintain principles.

IF APRIL 21st IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are more concerned with body image than the average person. You are artistic, have delightful sense of humor and tendency to scatter your forces. Gemini, Sagittarius persons play important roles in your life. You are due to rise above recent setback. In May, social activity accelerates and travel opportunities are present. You are versatile, determined, stubborn, sensual and could have weight problem. In July, you find constructive outlet for your creative capabilities. An important domestic adjustment takes place in August. Throughout remainder of year, you have grand opportunity to perfect techniques and to strengthen financial prospects.

Machinegun bandits hold store owner

MONTREAL (UPC) — Two machine-gun-toting bandits seized a jewellery store owner as hostage during a bungled holdup today and escaped after police gave them a second car in exchange for a police cruiser the gunmen had taken over.

"At the moment, we don't know where they are," a Montreal Urban Community police officer said near press time. "But they still have the hostage."

The gunmen were cornered for a time on a west-end street, a cul de sac in a quiet residential area, after a high-speed chase through the city.

A witness at the scene said the gunmen held the shop owner with a gun to his head during negotiations via police radio for the exchange of getaway vehicles.

Some 50 Montreal Urban Community police cruisers cordoned off the street but then withdrew to allow the gunmen to make good their escape, for fear of causing harm to the shop owner.

The hostage seizure, the MUCP said, occurred shortly before 10 a.m. when a police ambulance interrupted a holdup in a jewellery shop on downtown University St., off St. Catherine street in the heart of the city's shopping district. The ambulance later was exchanged for a police cruiser.

"Two suspects took over the police cruiser at the point of a machinegun," an MUC police officer said. "The suspects also have revolvers.

"There was a chase through the city and the suspects turned into a dead-end road," the officer said.

Two expert negotiators in hostage-seizures were rushed to the area before agreement was reached on the switch to a private car.

A police helicopter that was diverted to the scene also was withdrawn at the demand of the gunmen, police said.

LRB calls halt to Sidney strike

The Labor Relations Board has issued an interim cease-and-disist order to prevent employees at the Sidney branch of the Saanich Peninsula Savings Credit Union from conducting any more strikes or picketing.

The order stemmed from board hearings this week dealing with the firing of the branch's head teller, employee picketing and other issues.

Further hearings have been scheduled to begin May 6.

The credit union has been publicly embroiled in management-employee troubles since the beginning of the year flowing from efforts to unionize the 16 staff members.

In March, the LRB granted certification to the Office and Technical Employees Union but the employees were split roughly down the middle on whether or not to join the union.

The firing of head teller Judy Sayers earlier this month brought the conflicts to a boil again.

She was one of the chief organizers of the union movement and her firing triggered four days of picketing by eight employees.

The company maintained her termination had nothing to do with union activity but strictly with her performance and attitude on the job.

Wolfe appoints 2 to PSC

Two new commissioners have been appointed to the B.C. Public Service Commission, Government Services Minister Evan Wolfe announced.

They are Marie Taylor of Vancouver and Bill Venables of Victoria.

Mrs. Taylor is the past president of the Industrial Relations Management Association of British Columbia. She is B.C. manager for staff training and management development with the Simpsons-Sears Corporation and is chairman of the board of Vancouver General Hospital.

Venables, who has been with the British Columbia public service since 1967, was director of the pollution control branch form 1969 to 1979 and is at present assistant deputy minister for environmental planning and assessment in the ministry of the environment.

In making the announcement, Wolfe noted that Taylor and Venables will be filling the positions vacated by Gerald Cross and George Geddes. "These senior officials of my ministry have assisted the public service commission for a number of months and their work has been extremely valuable."

Ombudsman stays unpaid

Another ombudsman will be appointed at Victoria General Hospital, but the position will continue to be unpaid.

Alan Patterson, chairman of the hospital's board of management, told the semi-annual meeting of the Southern Vancouver Island Hospital Society Thursday about the decision.

The announcement follows Jo Dixon's resignation from the position.

Judaism focus of lecture

Victoria's synagogue invites the community to hear one of the most outstanding Jewish thinkers and historians of our time, Dr. Max Vorspan, Tuesday at 8 p.m. at the synagogue, 1461 Blanshard.

Vorspan is acting vice-president and professor of Jewish history at the University of Judaism in Los Angeles. He has been a key figure in shaping the basic character and program thrust of the university during the past three decades.

"His vision and imagination, combined with a sterling personality and a great oratorical gift, have helped make the University of Judaism one of the most important institutions on the West Coast," says Victoria Rabbi Harvey Markowitz.

Vorspan was educated at University of Minnesota and ordained at Jewish Theological Seminary. He served as rabbi of the 92nd Street YMHA in New York, as a U.S. Army chaplain, as rabbi of the Pasadena Temple in California, and as director of the the Brandeis Camp Institute in Simi Valley, Calif. He was executive director of the Pacific Southwest Region of the United Synagogue of America before joining the UJ administration.

Recipient of the degree of Doctor of Hebrew Letters from the Jewish Theological Seminary, Vorspan is author of The History of the Jews of Los Angeles, considered the definitive study published by the Jewish Publication Society. He has contributed a number of articles to the Encyclopedia Judaica, including the article on Los Angeles Jewry.

He is editor and host of the popular television show, Commitment, produced by the University of Judaism and NBC which airs Sunday mornings.

Vospan will speak on the topic: 1980-1990: A Vision of the Coming Decade. Admission is $3.50 for adults and $2.50 for students and seniors, proceeds to the University of Judaism. Further information call 382-0615.

Artists' third concert

Salmond and Mulder, songwriting artists from Vancouver, return today to the Oak Bay Secondary Auditorium for their third annual Victoria concert.

Roy Salmond, a native of Victoria, and Mike Mulder, Tsawwassen, are approaching the end of their third year together as Salmon and Mulder.

Having toured from San Diego to Anchorage and as far east as Toronto and Atlanta, Salmond and Mulder bring their blend of acoustic guitars and original compositions to audiences throughout the U.S. and Canada.

Energetic, yet disarmingly vulnerable, Roy and Mike bring the struggles and challenges of their faith and their relationships to their songs.

Tickets ($4.50 advance, $5 at the door) at the Christian Book Room and the Logos Bookstore in Victoria.

THE SINGING Saints youth choir of All Saints Anglican church in Vernon gives a concert at 7 p.m. tonight at St. John's Anglican Church, 1611 Quadra. The 50-voice choir will sing a specially written folk mass at the 9:30 a.m. service Sunday.

Perspectives and Prejudices

By REV. JOHN DAVIDSON

It is one of the insights of clinical psychology that conspicious self-depreciation is often a subtle form of self-assertion and self-aggrandizement.

A counsellor reported that when he asked a man if he had daydreams of self-importance he was given the answer, "Oh, no! I think much less of myself than I really am."

We are often suspicious of a person who seems conspicuously humble: We think he or she may be trying to hide something; we wonder what he or she is really up to. And when we are not suspicious of humility we are inclined to dismiss it as something soft and doormattish, as something not quite wholesome and normal. Humility is heavy with ambiguity.

There is the man who ostentatiously exudes modesty like cheap after-shave lotion as he belittles his achievements and capabilities. But he smiles becomingly when anyone mentions them. (Oliver Hereford, and American writer, defined modesty as "the gentle art of enhancing your charm by pretending not to be aware of it.")

There is the sly woman who goes through life being "poor little me" — the crushed daisy type who uses her apparent helplessness and meekness, her subtly aggressive humility, for getting her own way.

And there is the person — Dickens's Uriah Heep is the classic example — who wears a camouflage of humility over his ruthless desire to rule any roost on which he may find himself.

In Christianity humility is considered a major virtue. St. Augustine said, "Well nigh the whole substance of Christian discipline is humility." But we Christians often put humility in a false perspective.

A key New Testament passage on humility is in the second chapter of St. Paul's Letter to the Philippians, in which he explicates the humility of Jesus. "Do nothing from selfishness," Paul tells his fellow Christians, "but in humility count others better than yourselves. Let each of you look not only to his own interests, but also the interests of others."

Paul then shows that humility is not in the ostentatious putting-down of the self, not in cringing docility, but in outreaching compassionate service of the needs and sufferings of other persons. Humility is not in grovelling before others, but in serving their real good, not in swanking before God but in being honest about oneself with God.

Humility, then, is not in self-concern but in self-forgetting. It exists to the degree that you can forget selfish concern and direct your energies in service of others. Humility is an essential quality of what the Bible calls "love" the practical willing of the good of others.

You are not humble when you merely strive to appear to be humble: that kind of thing is simply a subtle form of arrogance. It is bogus humility that likes to say, "How very good of me to be so humble." Humility is not a pose; it is simply a dimension of love.

Dr. Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa).

Nobel prize recipient to speak here Sunday

Betty Williams, co-recipient with Mairead Corrigan of the 1976 Nobel Peace Prize, will address a public meeting in Victoria on Human Rights in Northern Ireland, on Sunday.

Co-sponsored by the Victoria Council of Churches and chaired by Bishop Remi De Roo, the meeting will be at Metropolitan United Church, Pandora at Quadra at 7:30 p.m.

In August, 1976, a British soldier shot the driver of an IRA car that went out of control, killing three small children. Their aunt, Mairead Corrigan, a 32-year-old secretary, publicly condemned the IRA for triggering the death of the children.

Mrs. Williams, a 34-year-old mother who lived near the scene, went door-to-door asking neighbors to demonstrate against violence.

WILLIAMS
. . . co—winner

The two women later met with 200 others to "declare war on war" and they staged a peaceful march. One week later, 10,000 Protestants and Catholics joined a second march, despite cries of treason by sectarian firebrands.

Under the auspices of the informal group, Catholics and Protestants met to discuss their common goals and declared: "We condemn all violence whether it is from the Ulster Defence Association, the IRA, or the British Army." The response outside the group was enormous.

When the Nobel committee announced there would be no 1976 peace prize (apparently because this movement was still taking shape when the nominations were being considered), 22 Norwegian newspapers raised $324,000 as a People's Peace Prize for the two Catholic women.

They used the money to build community centres, to send former terrorists into voluntary exile, and to support peaceful reconstruction. Though the women realized they had not brought lasting peace to Northern Ireland, violent deaths decreased dramatically.

In 1977 the Nobel committee announced that the 1976 Prize for Peace would be conferred a year behind schedule, on the two Belfast women, Mairead Corrigan and Betty Williams, who organized the Community of Peace People in Northern Ireland.

The Victoria meeting is being sponsored by Amnesty International, the United Nations Association, World Federalists of Canada, VIDEA, and Metropolitan United Church and co-sponsored by the Victoria Council of Churches. Admission is by collection.

Improved care urged

OTTAWA (CP) — The Catholic Health Association of Canada and the United Church of Canada have called again for improved medical care for Canadians.

The Catholic agency and the United Church recently submitted separate briefs to Chief Justice Emmett Hall, leader of a cross-country review of health services.

The United Church has recommended that each province establish an independent fee schedule review board that also would study doctors' complaints.

The brief also said provinces should finance government sponsored medical care through tax revenues instead of premiums.

Christian directory formed

Church chronicles

BUSINESSMEN Dave Roch and Tom Brown are attempting to link Christian businessmen, professionals and tradespeople with local churches through a quarterly Christian directory.

The directory would include a centre section of religious-related events and would give the born-again Christian community the opportunity for interaction.

Organizers have begun promoting the idea with a publication date in April. Inquiries should be directed to The Christian Community Directory, 3049 Tilicum Road, Victoria, V9A 2B2, phone 382-8977.

GIPP FORSTER of Mustard Seed will be guest speaker at the Guild of Health meeting on Thursday at 2 p.m. in the lower hall of St. John's Anglican Church, 1611 Quadra. His subject will be Healing of Relationships with those in crisis.

MAY 1 has been set as the date for the consecration of Ven. Hywell Jones as the ninth bishop of the Anglican diocese of B.C.

Jones was chosen from 15 nominated candidates by 202 voting delegates from all parishes in the diocese, which covers Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands.

FIRST UNITED Church will hold a pancake luncheon in Fellowship Hall following Sunday morning's service. It is sponsored by the church's young people. Proceeds are in support of Dr. Betty Bridgman and Edith Radly for their medical institute in Zaire which is caring for some of the 500,000 refugees streaming across the border from Angola.

Ottawa rector named bishop

The Rev. Dr. C.J. deCatanzaro, rector of Annunciation parish in Ottawa, has been consecrated bishop for the continuing Anglican Church of Canada.

Nine bishops participated in the April 12 ceremony in Ottawa. They included three Old Catholics, one of whom was the chief consecrator, and six from the continuing Episcopal Church in the United States.

In addition, a letter of assent to deCatanzaro's consecration was read from Bishop Cyril Eastaugh, retired Bishop of Peterborough, England, unable to attend because of ill health.

Archbishop Sylvester in Montreal of the Orthodox Church in America sent a message of goodwill and blessing by his archpriest.

The sermon by Very Rev. Roland F. Palmer of St. Athanasius parish in Victoria included:

"As the continuing remnant of the Anglican Church in Canada, we must have a bishop. It is our continuing steadfast in the faith, order and discipline of the Anglican Church which gives us our status and jurisdiction. The solemn act of consecration today is no act in schism. It is the bestowal of the episcopate upon the faithful remnant."

Attending the consecration from Victoria with Palmer, archpriest of the diocese, was church chancellor, Prof. Sandra McCallum.

DeCatanzaro was educated at King's College in Halifax, N.S., Keble College, Oxford, England, and Trinity College, University of Toronto. His doctorate is in semitic language. He is also a noted translator.

Contributor nominated

Rev. John A. Davidson, a regular contributor of religion articles to this newspaper, is one of several people recently nominated for the moderatorship of the United Church of Canada. The new moderator will be elected when the Church's general council meets in August in Halifax. Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.

Disintegration of an artist

By ANTHONY JENKINS

MAUGHAM: A Biography, by Ted Morgan. Musson. $23.95.

In the last ten years of his long life, Somerset Maugham set about destroying letters and private papers which might have aided future biographers in discovering the peculiar person he was. His statements to the press instructing friends to burn their correspondence produced knowing editorial comment: "We think he is smart . . . and the unburned letters will long be talked about when tomorrow's Cakes and Ale are being passed around." But in his last will, Maugham persisted in blocking the researchers: "There shall be no biography or publication of my letters."

Ted Morgan's massive and authoritative biography has been pieced together from those unburned letters that have found their way into American research libraries or which remain in private hands. He has also interviewed friends and relatives, and gleaned the long list of Maugham's works for reflections of his personal life.

Morgan's research was so painstaking and his attitude so dispassionate that the first draft of the book earned the blessing of Maugham's literary executor. Bound by that will to offer no such assistance, he provided access to still more facts, since hs felt he was fulfilling his duty by "preventing distortion of an author's reputation either by ill-chosen presentation of his work or by misrepresentation, however innocently intended, of his actions and character."

As a result, Morgan has produced what surely will be the standard biography and has provided for the general reader an engrossing picture of the creation and the tortured disintegration of an artist.

As regards Maugham's literary achievement, Morgan puts him squarely at the top of the second division. Maugham had an uncanny knack of gauging the current interests of his times and was "always willing to compromise in the interest of publication," whereas writers like James Joyce held out against the alteration of a single word even if that meant a publisher's rejection. Maugham was determined to win his living by his pen and, indeed, earned more than any writer before him.

Yet he was haunted by the knowledge that he was second-rate. He admitted, too, that his creative imagination was limited. His own experiences and the stories he heard from others stand thinly disguised upon the page.

His plays, from Lady Frederick on, achieved their enormous success because they were so undisturbing. They continued to show the fashionable drawing-rooms of Pinero with an added verbal dash of Wilde and a psychological touch of Ibsen. And when theatrical fashions moved on in the thirties, Maugham stopped writing for the stage.

His best novels, Of Human Bondage and Cakes and Ale, gain their conviction from the fact that Maugham himself was an outsider. Born in France, he was orphaned by the time he was ten and sent to live in a foreign country, England, with an aunt and uncle who could never replace the lost ideal that his dead mother represented.

The stammer, which was to continue for the rest of his 91 years, began on his arrival in England. "The stammer was a way of telling the world that he was not like others; a way of expressing his singularity. The stammerer is ambivalent about communicating with others — he desperately wants to communicate, but is afraid of revealing himself."

An objective biographer overcomes writer's attempt to block researchers

Maugham's most original achievements are his volumes of short stories with their exotic settings. They made Malaya, in particular, into "Maugham country." Yet, surprisingly, he was only there on two short visits during the twenties, after which, not surprisingly, he was persona non grata in Malaysia. Those who had offered him hospitality found the local gossip or their private lives re-shaped into fiction: "Behavior was unrestrained. A staid English couple transplanted to the Malay States would fall apart and become the figures in a sordid drama. Everyone he met had stories to tell . . ."

But though he coolly exposed the traumas of others — "I see them capable of every meanness and of every heroism: that indeed is why I find them so interesting, sympathetic, and amusing" — the tragedy of Maugham's personal life derived from his essential duality and from a truly Edwardian urge to cover up and put an acceptably social front upon things.

Although he was by nature homosexual, he married Syrie Barnardo partly for that social front and partly because of his conventional need to do the right thing by the mother of his daughter. But he immediately found their relationship uncomfortably demanding and grew to detest her. And ironically, Syrie, who had been prepared to accept the actualities of life with Willie, fell in love with him and was bitterly resentful of her male rivals.

Love meant "bondage" to Maugham, and the one deep love of his life, his secretary-companion Gerald Haxton, proved the disastrous truth of that. An outgoing, raffish spendthrift, Gerald was able to gather people's stories for the reserved and stammering master. But over the years he grew to despise his position as Maugham's appendage. He lashed out, misbehaved, drank himself into forgetfulness, until by the end Maugham was looking after him.

Gerald's replacement, Alan Searle, "was sweet where Gerald had been abrasive, peaceful where Gerald had been quarrelsome, domesticated where Gerald had been wild." For the last 20 years of Maugham's life, he was friend, nursemaid and grey eminence.

Before Morgan's book, the usual view of those last years was a sinister one: the senile writer at the mercy of his rapacious companion. While Morgan shows Searle's deviousness, particularly towards Maugham's daughter, he refused to judge him. He lets us see the fatal effects of Searle's indulgence of Maugham's whims; but he also reveals Searle's own nightmare and his terror of an impecunious middle-age.

The value of this biography derives from that disinterested pursuit of facts. The incipient sensationalism that surrounds Maugham's relationship with Syrie, Gerald or Alan, his last court battle with his daughter, his bitter and limiting cynicism toward life, is presented without interpretation. Morgan's sharpest comments are directed at Robin, Maugham's novelist nephew, and to find out what happened to Searle after Maugham's death one has to turn to the last footnote among the book's solid critical apparatus.

Finally, the sheer length of the book gives the reader the experience of that change from the cynical "Jester" of Maugham's early years to the wizened, raving paranoid of his last. Here was a man who was too old to fight in the First World War, who outlasted all his contemporaries, and who, throughout his life, and presented to the world "a system of impregnable defence. It was as though the vulnerability of his youth had hardened over the years into enamel."

Somerset Maugham . . . haunted by second ratedness

LaMarsh pen blunt weapon

By WALTER YOUNG

A RIGHT HONOURABLE LADY, by Judy LaMarsh. McClelland and Stewart. $13.95.

This is Miss LaMarsh's second attempt at writing a roman a clef. Regrettably, it is no better than her first.

This particular genre is undoubtedly appealing to the would-be novelist because it seems to offer an escape from the awful necessity of plot and character development. In fact, of course, that is not the case.

What appears to be a simple process of adapting actual circumstances and real people to a fictional situation becomes in the attempt a very demanding task. Subtlety, consistency and deftness are essential. Writers who have successfully attempted the roman à clef — and one thinks of Aldous Huxley's Point Counterpoint, Simon de Beauvoir's Mandarins, and the more roughly cast The New Machiavelli of H. G. Wells — manage to avoid being terribly obvious without at the same time being so clever that the reader cannot find the key and so unlock the puzzle. Equally important, however, even without the key these novels hold and repay their audience.

Miss LaMarsh is not subtle, fails to develop her characters and devises a plot that is not only unbelievable but provides for the betrayal of her sex by demonstrating that politics is no place for a woman.

The heroine is Kathleen Marshall, who has just wrested the leadership of the Liberal party — and thereby the office of prime minister — from Jean Jacques Charles. Jean Jacques Charles is not just any old Tom, Dick, Harry; he had "pock-marked skin stretched even tighter over his high cheekbones," and an "almost oriental cast to his face" with "hooded eyes". (Guess who, folks.)

It turns out that Jean Jacques did a secret deal with Fidel Castro involving the sale of a Candu reactor minus the nuclear proliferation safeguards. This upsets Billy Thompson, dumb American president, who imposes sanctions on Canada. Kathleen didn't know about this because neither Jean Jacques nor his side-kick, former Quebec labor leader Gabriel LaCroix, told her.

The leader of the Tories is dying of leukemia so, to save him from another campaign, Kathleen does not call an election. As a result she meets the House of Commons, the whole Cuban reactor deal comes out and former Liberal energy minister Stan Findlay — anti-abortion, eight kids, keen on travel — is implicated.

As a result of this mess Kathleen is defeated in the House, prime minister for only a mere handful of months. As the sun sinks behind the Peace Tower, she snuggles into her husband's arms and puts her political career behind her.

I have abbreviated the account, leaving out the minor luminaries, but it is not difficult to grasp the spongy core of it all. In fairness it might perhaps be suggested that Miss LaMarsh's experience with politics has impressed her with the shallowness and one-dimensional character of politicians. Her characters, politicians all, would then reflect this. It is difficult to sustain the argument, however, since even the most cynical view of human behavior in the corridors of power would provide considerably more depth than Miss LaMarsh manages to convey.

Apart from the physical description and the ludicrous name, there is nothing else to link Jean Jacques Charles with Trudeau and, apart from equally obvious clues, La Croix with Jean Marchand, Findlay with Otto Lang, Senator David Kirke with Keith Davey or Hume Frazier with John Turner.

Judy LaMarsh . . . unsubtle caricatures

For this kind of novel to be successful the characterization must be particularly clever. It is not enough that a character look like Trudeau, he should behave like Trudeau. In fact, physical resemblance is the least important device.

In other words, the whole business fails because it is so obvious, so pointless and so completely lacking in subtlety and sophistication.

Writing a political novel using thinly disguised contemporaries as leading characters is a difficult and dangerous game. Miss LaMarsh has bravely played it twice. There is, presumably, some credit in that. While one can understand her wanting to try it a second time, what is puzzling is the willingness of her publisher to go ahead with what is so clearly an unsuccessful attempt.

'Gay and full of fantasy, or melancholy and wise'

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

COLETTE: A Biography, by Michele Sarde. Gage. $16.95.

"My plan," Michele Sarde tells us, "has been to create for you, who have read and loved Colette, and for those who do not already know her, the history of a particular subjectivity — her own — filterd through another subjectivity, mine."

The "subjectivity" that we know as Colette was born in 1873 to Captain Jules Colette, a tax collector, and Sidonie Landoy, the famous Sido who was to have such a lasting influence on her life.

Colette's early years can only be described as idyllic, at least outwardly, but as she progressed through school the family fortunes dwindled to such a point that when Colette was 17 her family home and all its possessions were sold at public auction.

Three years later the penniless girl was married to Henry Gauthier-Villars, the infamous "Willy".

We owe the man profound thanks, however: It is conceivable that without his cruelty our Colette would never have come into existence.

Literally locked up with pen and paper, Colette produced a series of novels that made her master famous — for Willy signed and sold them all.

Claudine lotion, ice cream, perfume, ties, hats and cigarettes flooded a Paris that was already glutted with the trivia of a dying civilization. Rich and influential in the world that Sardes so brilliantly evokes, Willy paraded his lusts and eccentricities through the city.

And Colette?

"I want to do what I please," she wrote in 1904. ". . . I want to perform in pantomines, in plays. I want to dance naked if tights hamper me . . . I want to retreat to some island if I so desire, or to frequent women who live by their charms, as long as they are gay and full of fantasy, or melancholy and wise like so many femmes de joie. I want to write sad books and chaste books in which there will be nothing but descriptions of landscapes, flowers, sorrow, pride, and the straightforwardness of charming animals that shun men . . . I want to smile at every kind face and turn away from ugly, dirty and evil-smelling people. I want to cherish those who love me and give them what I have to give: my body that hates to be shared, my tender heart, my freedom."

Two years later she was living alone in the ground-floor apartment she immortalized in The Vagabond. She was writing, she was working in music halls and she was experimenting with the lesbian life-style that was so prevalent at the time.

And yet, and yet . . . another marriage intervened. Colette became a baroness and mingled again with the people she used to entertain.

More humiliations and deceits. The end of her second marriage.

Throughout these unhappy times, Colette worked — as a novelist, scriptwriter and journalist. She did not regard herself as a "natural" writer, nor even as a very good one: she wrote because she had to make a living and because she enjoyed the satisfaction of producing a concrete piece of work.

Were there ever times without financial worries, without lovers' lies, without the noise of those who thought of her work and her life as immoral?

Of course: times with true friends, with animals, with memory. Increasingly Colette evoked the past in her writing, returning to the countryside she loved and the mother who meant so much to her.

When she died in 1954 Colette was one of the most widely read and loved writers in France. Today, her works and life still inspire.

My sparse account of that life hardly does justice to its richness; for a full appreciation of that, Michele Sarde's biography is necessary.

It would have been easy to psychologize Colette, or at least to make the attempt, but Sarde quite wisely refrains from doing so. Instead, she allows Colette to speak for herself as much as possible by mixing the writer's words with her own throughout the text. Although the transition between the two women's words is occasionally rather confusing, Colette's unique vision of her time, her place and herself more than compensates for any awkwardness in Sarde's construction.

Illustrated with 45 photographs — many published here for the first time — Colette: A Biography is an indispensable enjoyment for anyone who loves literature, life and — love!

Colette . . . biography captures flavor of a life and works that still inspire

Castro stops exodus

SAN JOSE (AP) — Fidel Castro stopped refugee flights to Costa Rica from Havana as demonstrators gathered in the Cuban capital for a mass rally today, the 19th anniversary of the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion. Exile groups expressed fears that violent clashes might take place.

Castro ended the flights Friday for the almost 10,000 Cubans who jammed into the Peruvian Embassy in Havana two weeks ago and demanded that they fly directly to the countries where they are to settle instead of to Costa Rica, the staging area for the exodus.

The refugee flights, which started Wednesday, have brought about 700 Cubans to Costa Rica so far. Some already have left here for Peru. Others have flown directly from Cuba to Spain.

Costa Rican President Rodrigo Carazo appealed to Castro Friday night "not to put political interests ahead of humanitarian interests" and to let the flights continue. He indicated Costa Rica will increase its quota to more than the 300 it originally agreed to take.

"The doors of Costa Rica will always be open for all those who want to come and find whatever it is their soul needs," Carazo said in a taped message played to reporters. Carazo is travelling in the interior of the country.

Radio Havana said more than one million Cubans were expected to take part in an all-day parade to show support for the Cuban government and "repulsion for the parasites, vagrants, bums and anti-social elements" at the embassy.

Slayings outrage UN council

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — Responding with outrage to the killing of two U.N. peacekeeping forces troops in South Lebanon, the Security Council has said it would take "determined action" to assert U.N control over the area.

Some 22 delegates briefly took the floor in a dramatic meeting Friday night to make clear that wanton Christian militia attacks on the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNFIL) had reached the limit with the slayings.

A U.N. spokesman said the two U.N. soldiers were "taken into custody" by senior militia officers and then shot in the back and neck at close range.

Russia tests killer satellite

By RICHARD BURT
New York Times

WASHINGTON — Carter administration officials said the Soviet Union tested a "killer satellite" in outer space Friday, breaking its two-year moratorium on launching anti-satellite weapons.

A "killer" satellite is an orbiting spacecraft designed to knock down other satellites by either smashing into them or attacking them with weapons such as high-powered lasers.

The officials said that the "killer," designated by Moscow as Cosmos 1174, swooped close to a target satellite orbited by the Soviet Union earlier this month. They said that preliminary intelligence indicated that the test was a failure.

Moscow's decision to hold an anti-satellite test was described by some Pentagon aides as possibly signaling a more assertive phase in Soviet arms policy.

American officials have shown concern over Moscow's anti-satellite program because the United States, in recent years, has beome highly dependent on satellites for a variety of military functions, including reconnaissance, communications and early warning of attack.

Although an American anti-satellite system is now under development, officials said that it was unlikely to be tested until 1982.

American officials suggested that by originally instituting a moratorium on testing, Moscow wanted to show its interest in concluding a new treaty limiting strategic bombers and missiles.

The treaty was signed last June, but early this year President Carter asked the Senate to defer its action on the agreement after Soviet forces moved into Afghanistan.

Some officials suggested that with the outlook for arms control now bleak.

'Frisco fakes quake

Times News Services

SAN FRANCISCO — With a script that would rival Hollywood, a massive mock disaster drill was staged here Friday on the 74th anniversary of the great San Francisco earthquake.

Helicopters whirred overhead, ambulances raced through the streets and hundreds of firemen, police, doctors, nurses, soldiers and emergency workers scurried into action as though a deathly, destructive quake really had occurred.

The drill reflected a new wave of official concern over a lack of preparedness for another big quake that scientists say may likely occur within the next decade. Apathy is the heart of the problem, officials said.

"There's been a lack of interest on the part of the public," said Dr. Mervyn Silverman, the city health care services director.

School shut near volcano

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Scientists say continuing earthquakes indicate instability on the north flank of Mount St. Helens, and an aging elementary school near the volcano has been closed.

Fears for patients in Alberta strike

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta Hospital Association wants the provincial government to invoke emergency powers under the Labor Act and order about 6,600 striking nurses back to work because lives may be in danger.

However, in response to the association request Friday, Hospitals Minister Dave Russell said there now is no evidence to support a back-to-work order.

Nurses at 79 hospitals walked out at 7 a.m. Friday. Their counterparts at two small hospitals, one in Canmore and the other in McLennan, joined the strike at 7 a.m. today.

"We now know their (the hospital association's) position insofar as a settlement is concerned," Russell said.

"But whether or not it's time to actually order the legally-striking nurses back to work is something that we have to assess under the terms of the Labor Act and we're watching that . . . on an hourly basis very, very closely."

He said the government will step in if necessary.

Labor Minister Les Young said Friday officials of his department will be available throughout the weekend if representatives of the United Nurses of Alberta or the hospital association request assistance in further mediation talks.

Young said a back-to-work order would only be introduced if mediation had clearly failed to resolve the dispute and he did not believe that had occurred yet. He said he would rely on advice from Russell to determine when talks had failed.

He said the association asked that the nurses be ordered back to work because, "The possibility is always there that lives will be lost in this situation.

"You compound the risks to the public the longer you delay it (a return to work)."

There have been no major problems reported at any of the hospitals where nurses are on strike or at provincially-run hospitals which are still operating.

SHOULD YOU BUY GOLD OR SILVER?

"If you have available liquid funds, buy gold or silver, and do not even look at the price. What you should be interested in is the general trend and the daily fluctuations. No one can predict the daily fluctuations. One can only have a reasonable opinion and judgement about the trend. As long as there is inflation, and inflation will continue, the value of paper money will go down and the value of precious metals is bound to go up. Experience has shown that the price of precious metals goes up more than the erosion of the purchasing power of paper money; Hence, we tell our friends to put their available liquid funds into precious metals." — Nicholas Deak festival

Dancers of many nationalities and styles have dominated the first half week of the Greater Victoria Music Festival. At the moment of writing school entries have still a day to go before adjudicator Julia Ascough announces the groups she would like to see participate in the honors performance which will take place May 1 at Central Junior Secondary.

Choice is made from among the best groups, primarily on the basis of providing a balanced and varied representative program.

Three full days of studio dance and five full days of speech classes start the first completeFestival week off, Monday. Tuesday, piano and vocal classes join in and the Festival is truly off and running.

Piano and voice occupy 10 days non-stop, 9 a.m. to 9:30 or 10 at night. Double that score for piano which occupies two centres simultaneously for the entire period — First United Church Fellowship Hall and Christ Church Cathedral Hall.

Speech sessions will take place at St.Matthias Hall, 600 Richmond, and the vocal classes at St.Andrew's Kirk Hall, 680 Courtney.

Studio Dance, which comprises ballet, character, tap, jazz, modern, non-authentic national, stage song-and-dance and acrobatic, takes place at Oak Bay Junior Secondary, Monday through Wednesday. Honors Performance for this section will be on April 27 at 7 p.m. at McPherson Playhouse.

There is a fine entry for adult choral this year and these classes will take place Friday and Saturday evenings in the Kirk Hall. The popular vocal and piano championship classes which include the Rose Bowl and Victoria Medallion competitions, will be held on the evenings of May 1 and 2.

Strings, brass, woodwind, bands and school choral sessions are all part of the second week.

Other special events are the speech honor performance, Friday at 8 p.m., a fine lieder competition with 12 entries and male oratorio class, Tuesday evening, and an operatic and concert group session, on May 2.

The climax as usual, will be the Festival Highlights concert at McPherson Playhouse May 5.

Schools which have always played an important part in the festival since its beginning 29 years ago, are well represented in the second week by choirs and bands and some string ensembles.

A vital aspect of the festival is the role played by the adjudicators. For students they provide a fresh, unbiased viewpoint; in most cases a friendly, constructive criticism based on intensive training and experience.

It is the nature of criticism that it is frequently debatable. At the upper level of performance, as in open classes for example, adjudicators repeatedly point out that many of their remarks are a matter of opinion and personal taste. Still it is always useful to entertain a different opinion even if one ends up discarding it.

Piano this year is being adjudicated by Isobel Rolston and Alexandra Munn. Rolston is a member of the teaching staff of the Banff School of Fine Arts. She specializes in chamber music playing. Munn is a professor in the University of Alberta music department at Edmonton; a soloist, accompanist and choral conductor.

Other adjudicators in the first week include David Astor judging vocal and choral work. Assistant head of the Academy of Voice at Banff, Astor's tenor has been heard twice this season in Victoria — as the Prince in University of Victoria' concert-opera production of Rossini's Cinderella, and more recently as soloist in Handel's oratorio, The Creation, at UVic.

Dr. Leona Paterson makes a welcome return after 10 years, to adjudicate speech. Recently retired as director of the Conservatory of Music and Speech Arts at Mount Royal College in Calgary, she is co-author of several articles on Readers Theatre and speech and editor of the Canadian Speech Association publication, Spectrum.

In the second week director of music at the Banff School of Fine Arts, Tom Ralston will be judging strings and orchestra. He is a former associate conductor and concert master of the Edmonton Symphony and director of string playing and chamber music coaching at the University of Alberta.

Bands, brass, woodwinds and guitar will be adjudicated by Dr.George W. Lotzenhiser, dean of the School of Fine Arts in Eastern Washington University.

HAMLYN GOES BROKE when town treasurer Herr Schiller (Cliff Ridley) who with Frau Schiller (Janie Woods-Morris) absconds with the treasure, leaving the town too broke to pay the piper. And every youngster attending a Four Seasons Musical Theatre performance of The Pied Piper this Saturday at McPherson Playhouse will find out what that means. Four Seasons' version of the fable will also be seen Sunday at the McPherson and the following Sunday, April 20, at Esquimalt Recreation Centre. On Saturday May 3 it will be at Cedar Hill Recreation Centre, 3220 Cedar Hill.

Mostly music this weekend

This weekend will be alive with the sound of music in spite of the fact that the University's School of Music, the Victoria Symphony and Musical Art Society have all concluded their seasons.

As far as Sunday evening is concerned there is a choice between two highly promising events: There will be the Western Brass-Edward Norman concert at St.John's and at UVic's Recital Hall, The Towne Waytes and Consortium Antiquum.Both concerts begin at 8 p.m.

Angene Feves and Charles Perrier, the Consortium Antiquum of San Francisco, join Vancouver's Towne Waytes to represent the excitement and color of the famous Gonzaga family of renaissance Italy.

Feves is respected around the world for her expert knowledge of renaissance dance, presented in performance, lectures and workshops. With partner Perrier, in a swirl of velvet, jewels, lace and feathers, the Consortium will offer dances of 16th century Europe, while the Waytes — six Vancouver musicians — will bow, blow, pound and pluck their early instrument reproductions in complimentary music, both accompaniment and solo.

At the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, at 3 p.m. on Sunday there will be a concert for viola, piano and harpsichord, presenting keyboard artist Susan Thorn with violist Christine Prince. Music by Eccles, Bach, Bloch and Brahms will be performed.

Western Brass are lined up for Sunday show with Edward Norman

audrey johnson

Final performance of the short Puccini opera, Suor Angelica and abbreviated version of Donizetti's L'Elisir d'Amore, by Conservatory of Music Opera Workshop seniors, takes place tonight at Cridge Memorial Hall, 626 Blanshard at 8 p.m.

Bastion Theatre board and its committees are an excellent example of a society that is really working hard to support its artistic product.

The job of a board of directors of any arts organization is primarily to supply the sinews — in other words, money!

They have or should have no say on the artistic side and little in management, so what are board members there for if not to be fund raisers. The financial health — or lack of it — of an arts organization depends largely on the energetic pursuit of this primary function. Those who are unwilling to make the sacrifice of time and inclination should never take a seaton such boards.

Bastion is fortunate in having attracted real workers to their banner. People like Maryla Waters and Barbara Copeland are worth their weight in gold.

At the moment Barbara is up to her attractive eyebrows in plans for a Fine Art Auction. It's part of the current major fund-raising campaign and will take place May 7 at the Empress Hotel.

There will be art for every taste and purse, says Barbara. At the top of the list will be names to conjure with like Dali, Miro and Chagall. It'll also be a social evening with tasty refreshments so you can hardly miss at the admission and catalogue charge of $5.

First prize winner in the British Columbia Young Artsts' Competition held in Surrey, B.C., is Monica Pfau, a first-year Piano Performance Major at the University of Victoria.

Monica has been a consistent winner of Victoria Music Festival Awards as well as of B.C. Cultural Fund, Victoria Musical Art and Community Arts Council scholarships. She was also awarded the Royal Conservatory of Music's silver medal in 1979 for obtaining the highest mark in the province's piano examinations.

A student of Robin Wood, Monica plans to use her scholarship money for tuition at Victoria's Shawnigan Summer School of the Arts which she will be attending for the third consecutive year.

Spring session of the Bastion Theatre School began today with junior classes. Other age group classes begin next week. There is still room for registrations in some preschool to adult classes says exeuctive director Helen Simpson-Baikie. To inquire call Bastion, 386-8301.

Harry Belafonte's lilting calypso lyries notwithstanding, he's not a native Jamaican, but his parents are, so he feels a kinship. The Jamaican tourist office in Montego Bay says Belafonte will help boost the Caribbean nation's tourist industry later this year by filming an hour-long CBS-TV special. Belafonte was born in the U.S.

When Spencer Gurvin giggled his way onto the Merv Griffin show to win the national laugh contest sponsored by the makers of the Robby Benson flick, Die Laughing, Atlanta got its most spectacular film premiere since Gone With the Wind. Gurvin, whose laugh was judged "most infectious and most resonant," will be a guest in his own home at a special premiere of the film — complete with red carpeting, kleig lights and a popcorn machine in the living room.

With jazz greats such as Lionel Hampton playing for free, New Orleans honored its most famous son, jazz trumpeter Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong, by opening a 31-acre "adult pleasure garden" park named after him. The $10 million park is expected to feature almost continuous entertainment and food booths offering some of the spicy Creole and Cajun dishes the city is famed for. As hundreds watched on a sunny, windy day, Satchmo's widow, Lucille, unveiled a 12-foot statue of her husband.

Statue, Hampton and widow Armstrong

For five years, Art Garfunkel has considered himself a divorced man. But St. Louis judge Milton Saitz says it isn't so — that the divorce the second half of the old Simon and Garfunkel duo got in Port-Au-Prince, Haiti in 1975 is invalid. Saitz overturned the Haitian decree on grounds neither Garfunkel nor wife Linda was a Haitian resident. The move allows Linda to sue for a brand new divorce — along with alimony and a share of community property.

Marilyn Monroe and Albert Einstein? C'mon! Don't scoff, says Shelley Winters — it may have happened. In excerpts from the Winters memoirs, Shelley says she and Marilyn once drew up fantasy lists of men with whom they'd most like love affairs. She says she was stunned to find Einstein on Marilyn's, and protested, "There's no way ... He's the most famous scientist in our century and besides, he's an old man!" Said Marilyn, "That has nothing to do with it. I hear he's very young for his age." After Marilyn's death, says Shelley, "a large framed photograph of Einstein was found among her possessions. On it was written, 'To Marilyn, with respect and love and thanks — Albert Einstein.'"

Peninsula band marks a birthday

An ensemble that began life as a dixieland group and grew up into a full community orchestra playing a wide range of music from classics to pop, is 22 years old and going strong.

This winter the Saanich Peninsula Orchestra was incorporated under the Societies Act of B.C. and became a non-profit society. In the coming two weeks the orchestra, under its present conductor, Hilary Hawkes-Frost, will be heard in two concerts.

The first will be Sunday at 8 p.m. in Sanscha Hall where it will share the program with the Saanich District Youth Choir, conducted by Mike Witter. Selections to be played by the orchestra include the grand march from Meyerbeer's Le Prophete, the first movment of Beethoven's Symphony No.5, the Boccherini Cello Concerto with Victoria Symphony principal cellist Larry Skaggs as soloist, and a medley of tunes from Lionel Bart's Oliver!.

On April 27 at 2 p.m., the orchestra will perform in concert at Christ Church Cathedral. The Meyerbeer, Beethoven and Boccherini numbers will be repeated and there will be a performance of the Water Music suite by Handel.

The antecedent of the orchestra, the dixieland band, came into being in 1958. It consisted of five musicians: Larry Goodmanson, piano; Ted Crampton, clarinet; Frank Barnard, trumpet; Al Jones, trombone; and Ken Warner, sax. The qintet gathered at the Crampton home for the first of regular jam sessions.

Other musicians became interested and it soon grew too large for living room rehearsals. The group moved to North Saanich High School gym in 1960 and Goodmanson was appointed conductor.

In 1964 the orchestra became part of School District 63 adult education program. Still expanding, the committee hired Derek McDermot as conductor and over the next four years he built the group into a 37-piece orchestra.

Dorothy Evans, who had done outstanding work with the Greater Victoria Schools Orchestra from 1950 to 1962, took over, bringing many of her old pupils into the orchestra and swelling its ranks to 48 before she left in 1971. One of her former pupils, well known Victoria string instructor Bernard Rain, left his concert master post to take up the baton for two years and he was followed by Peter Stiggings, music drector for School District 63.

In 1977 the orchestra committee engaged well known retired CBC musician and conductor Cardo Smalley. But a week before the season's first rehearsal, Smalley died suddenly.

It was at this point that Hawkes-Frost brought her energy and expertise to the orchestra's aid.

Oboist with the Victoria Symphony and band instructor at Stelly's Senior Secondary School, under her direction the orchestra played its first complete major symphony, Beethoven's No. 1 in 1978 and was greeted with a standing ovation. She has also conducted the ensemble in a well-received concert at Wilkinson Road Jail.

Two of the founding dixieland members are still with the orchestra, Goodmanson playing viola and clarinetist Ted Crampton also serving as music librarian.

Singer cheered by Jimmy

MONTREAL (UPC) — Roger Doucet, the ailing silver-haired tenor who has sung the national anthem at Montreal Canadiens hockey games for a decade had his spirits lifted when he received a get-well card from one of his biggest fans — Jimmy Carter.

"It was a beautiful gesture. President Carter has class," said Doucet, who underwent a nine-hour operation April 10 at Montreal General Hospital for removal of a brain tumor.

Ben Kaye, the 60-year-old singer's personal manager, said Doucet was "very cheered up" by the letter on White House stationary from Carter and his wife Rosalynn.

The message read: "Rosalynn and I were sorry to learn of your illness. We hope you will be strengthened knowing that the thoughts and prayers of your family and friends are with you." It was signed simply: "Jimmy Carter."

His wife, Geraldine, an opera singer, has replaced him during his illness.

In 10 years with the Canadiens, Doucet had failed only once before his recent hospitalization to sing the Canadian and U.S. national anthems at the start of a game. Last year, he came down with a sore throat.

Top band deserves a pat

By ISAAC WILLIAMS

Rush! You may be tired of hearing that name by now but here it comes one more time. No, this isn't going to be a review of their latest opus, Permanent Waves, or a report on their recent concert in Victoria. It's an occasion for giving credit where credit is due.

Rush is Canada's top band. They are the only Canadian recording act that sells significantly on the international market.

Trooper, for example, may be hot stuff at home but are laughed at in the states and unheard of in England.

Permanent Waves, on the other hand, is now in the U.S. top ten and it topped the British album charts in February. In Britain, were heavy-metal is forging a comeback, Rush is considered the leader of the movement, the ideal replacement for the burned out Led Zeppelin.

To a rock and roller's ears Rush's music is mostly garbage — overblown, pretentious, and ultimately boring. To heavy-metal-impaired eardrums, the Rush sound is ecstasy — strong riffs that go nowhere and take a long time to do it. I must confess that Permanent Waves is the first Rush album that I can actually sit through without being strapped into my chair — so perhaps they are improving. (If they could control their excesses, I might someday like Rush better. But then why argue with success?)

The Waves album has already sold at least two million copies and I am sure the band don't care who likes them or not.

There is a rush that I do like. Canada's other long time heavy-metal act, Mahogany Rush. They have just released a new album called What's Next.

There is a legend about the band that helps explain their sound: Guitarist Frank Marino was in a Montreal hospital recovering from too much LSD back in the early seventies and he was visited by the spirit of the late Jimi Hendrix, so the tale goes.

Hendrix apparently told Marino to go out and carry on with the electric blues style that made Jimi famous. To Marino's credit his guitar playing lives up to the standards set by Hendrix and this is probably why the band suits my preferences. There are moments on What's Next when it is hard to believe that Hendrix is dead. On the Marino- penned song Finish Line he yells "Move over!" and I keep waiting to hear "and let Jimi take over". Marino's songs could easily have been written by Hendrix — and they are the highlights of the album.

On these songs the band provides an inspired, slightly funky, rhythm section that recalls the Band of Gypsies period when Buddy Miles and Billy Cox supported Hendrix.

The low points on this and every Mahogany Rush album are the cover songs. Doing Rock Me Baby, a Hendrix standard, is just plain dumb. Marino isn't a Hendrix imitator. Although he is inspired by the Hendrix spirit, he should leave the Hendrix material to people like Randy Hansen who make a living pretending they are Jimi Hendrix. The other two songs, The Doors' Roadhouse Blues and Bo Diddley's Mona are just filler. In the four years since the release of World Anthem, Mahogany Rush's last studio album, I am sure Marino had time to write more than the five new songs that appear on What's Next.

It seems to be a record company decision to throw in some cover versions in search of the elusive FM airplay and almost ruin an excellent album in the process.

Mahogany Rush may not chalk up the same sales figures as Rush but they will certainly get more spins on my turntable.

Watercolors by notable Victoria artist Kay Ratcliffe will occupy the Backroom Gallery, 2070 Oak Bay, for the next two weeks. The show opens Sunday afternoon for a preview and continues through May 3.

Ratcliffe has had a number of one woman shows in the United States. She has twice won Honorable Mentions in shows of the Northwest Watercolour Society of which she is a member. Her work also won her the Alderson Award in the Federation of Canadian Artists Travelling Exhibition in 1978.

She is a member of the Canadian Society of Painters in Watercolour and of the Federation of Canadian Artists.

On the University of Victoria campus there are currently two shows to be seen. The Maltwood Art Museum and Gallery has Majors II, which opened this week and will remain on view through May 1.

It consists of work of the UVic Visual Arts graduating students.

The Maltwood is located in the University Centre and viewing hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on weekdays.

Works by Miriam Thorn are on display at UVic's McPherson Library Gallery until Friday. Working in various mediums her work is often expressive of themes sensed in musical compositions translated into color and shape.

Thorn is a Fine Arts graduate of UVic and of Canterbury University in New Zealand. She has also studied in London, England and now teaches in UVic's Extension Department and at Camosun College.

Circle Crafts of Vancouver has a handsome exhibition of beautifully made quilts on view in the McPherson Playhouse mezzanine gallery. They represent a wide spectrum of color and texture and a variety of effective designs. They can be seen during the day throughout the week and on evenings when there is a show in the theatre, until May 5.

Chinese - curious, friendly - throng to visitors

By NEIL MORGAN

In a nation of about 1 billion people, throngs are inevitable. In China, some throngs are arranged merely to flatter the foreign visitor.

This one wasn't.

The small Yellow Sea port of Yentai was opened to foreigners last summer for the first time in 30 years. When the 2,500-ton Lindblad Explorer tied up there last fall, 90 American passengers walked through shaded streets and life in China stopped.

Shopkeepers abandoned customers buying charcoal or hot water and peered from doorways. Young mothers held their children up high and pushed close. Old men and women who remember too many Chinese pasts looked on with clouded eyes.

I stopped and beckoned for permission to photograph a young woman and her baby son.

She nodded, shy eyes gleaming with curiosity. Impulsively I put down my camera and held out my hands. Without hesitation the mother moved her baby from her shoulder to my arms. He stared up into my face and managed a toothless grin.

Several hundred Chinese had closed in around us, applauding. I kissed the baby's cheek and put him back into his mother's arms. She laughed, and I clapped, too, realizing my eyes were strangely moist.

"Now we will go on to the museum," our escort from China International Travel Service called from the edge of the crowd.

The museum was not much, but under nearby trees a nursery class and its teachers stood cued to sing and dance.

This little throng had been arranged.

Like so much of China life, this second scene conveyed the message of early and rigid discipline, of vast and durable human energy, and of the well-oiled procedures that lead foreigners through a somewhat synthetic China.

This particular China isshrewdly compounded of restored glories of the dynasties, and the brighter side of China's considerable acheivement since the Communist revolution of 1949.

By the end of the first year of normalized relations between China and the United States, on Dec. 31, somewhat more than 20,000 American tourists will have visited China.

Few of them will have ventured far from the smiling, orchestrated world of China International Travel Service (CITS). They ride China's only air-conditioned buses (imported from Japan), stay in hotels tidied up for Western visitors, many of them offering Western food, and they ride the lace-curtained rail coaches with cotton slipcovers over plush seats, and with bonsai plants in window pots.

If they try to walk forward to see life in second-, third-, fourth- or fifth-class train travel, as I did, they may find the doors locked. They usually enter and leave rail stations through private waiting rooms above the throngs, and they pay several times as much as Chinese for travel.

Although the tourist usually is free to do so, he seldom goes far alone. He is tightly scheduled, and the intricacies of language and transit discourage private manoeuvres. All Chinese are members of units of one kind or another, and the Chinese prefer their visitors to fall into units also They are easier to manage.

During 21 days in China this fall, the 90 Lindblad Explorer passengers and our three accompanying Chinese scholars (all Americans) briefed and debriefed each other, and almost daily met to compare or contrast what we had seen or been told.

We reveled in splendors of China's past and saw much of the present primitive thrust toward modernization. Some of us left the planned itinerary for a day or longer. In my case it was time enough to be reassured of the sincerity and warmth of the Chinese people's welcome, but also to sense the rigidity of the police state under which they live.

China is not yet for the casual vacatiaoner. One must work at it. Distances are great and amenities scarce. It can be expensive. The Chinese recognize that they have a sellers' market and group tour fees remain high.

Yet this may be the best time to visit China for many years to come. When it becomes as easy as other travel, much of the charm and learning experience will have gone out of it — both for the visitor and for the Chinese.

Contrary to recent announcements, smallpox inoculation is not required by China, nor is any other unless you are coming from a nation where cholera is epidemic.

Travellers' cheques of all major companies may be cashed at hotels and in the so-called Friendship Stores of each tourist city. Credit cards are not yet accepted in China.

China visitors seem rarely to get gastrointestinal ailments. But colds are almost epidemic, and Peking visitors in our group and others were stricken with a flu-like respiratory infection that did not seem to respond as well to Western antibiotics as to herb tablets prescribed by desk clerks and bellmen. One that worked for me: yin chiao chien tu pien (four tablets morning and night).

Don't take ornate clothing or jewelry to China. If you wear either, even to banquets, you'll feel out of place. Summers are hot in China. Light safari suits are ideal for men and women, and women are welcomed in slacks. After all, most Chinese women are wearing them.

Bicycles, though very expensive, are a common form of transportation in China

Across India on a train

By CATHY O'NEILL

HAMPI, India (CP) — The train ride into Bombay from the international airport can be a frightening introduction to this country for the Western traveller.

Even the adventurous voyager is unlikely to try the half-hour ride in the style of some local commuters — hanging from the windows of the train as it whizzes down the track.

The cramped trip can be avoided by taking a taxi instead. But the cost of about 50 rupees ($7 Canadian) is an extravagance in a country where the packsack tourist can live well for a small price away from the large centres.

For about $2 a day a foreigner with modest habits can see the countryside, get to know local people, explore some of the world's greatest ancient wonders and live comfortably.

Two can cross the southern cone of the continent by train for about $10, getting off at any scheduled stop, although the ticket must be signed each time by the local station master. The east-west trip takes two days by express, several days more by mail train.

Hotels in small villages such as Hospet, in the centre of the country, charge about $2.50 for a double room that is clean and furnished with two single beds, mosquito nets, a table, two chairs and a rug. An all-you-can-eat meal of rice, vegetables, beans and curd costs about 30 cents.

Hospet is about half an hour by bus on a bumpy road from Hampi, the centre of the Vijyanagar Empire, one of the greatest ancient Hindu kingdoms. It contains 24 square miles of ancient temples, ruins and marketplaces, some inhabited by poor Indians living in slum conditions.

The area is a favorite among Indian tourists who make religious pilgrimages, sometimes on group bus tours. They get out of the bus, run from temple to temple in the main area, perform a ritual in each and snap photos before hopping back on the bus.

Their tour takes about two hours but an uninitiated foreigner could spend weeks exploring the temples towering majestically against the stark tropical sun and still not see everything.

In winter, Indian tourists come to gawk at the North American and European hippies who set up housekeeping in some of the temples, taking refuge during the rainy monsoon season from their usual home away from home — the hotels and beach huts at Goa, on the west coast.

Hampi is in a primarily agricultural region, lush with banana and coconut palms and sugar cane.

To the east is Madras on the coast of the Bay of Bengal, an overnight train ride away from Hampi. It's the cleanest and least crowded of India's four largest cities — the others are Bombay, Calcutta and New Delhi.

Swimming near city beaches is not advised as sharks are drawn to the harbor areas. A walk on the main streets brings encounters with poor, ailing beggars, some of them crippled.

Street hawkers sell everything from spiced nuts to snake skins. Cows, sacred in this country, mingle freely with pedestrians and sometimes cause traffic tie-ups.

To the south, five hours by bus from Madras, is Pondicherry, a former French colony famous for Sri Aurobindo, an Indian freedom fighter and spiritual leader whose Indian and Western followers have maintained a community in his name since before his death in the 1950s.

The community, a self-sufficient group called an ashram, welcomes visitors and provides accommodation for a modest fee to those curious about its activities, which range from spiritual guidance to production of handmade paper and machine-made steel utensils.

It's a peaceful place to recover from an overdose of bus and train travel. Bicycles are rented for tours of nearby villages, past weavers, street hawkers and tea shops, down to the sea for a leisurely dip.

As one returns to the ashram, the setting sun radiates a golden glow through the coconut groves where screeching long-tailed parakeets make for their nests as dusk settles in.

Mexico City - where Cortez fought Aztecs

with
STAN DELAPLANE

In Madrid, in a dusty back street shop, I bought a map of Mexico City. A copy. The original is in Seville. In the Archives of the Indies, a mountain of ancient government paperwork that flowed from the New World, still being mined by scholars.

It's dated 1562. Only a few years after the Conquest. You can see the great lakes that surrounded the capital the Aztecs called Tenochtitlan. The great square (which is still the city's center). And the street where Cortez retreated on La Noche Triste -- the Sad Night -- believing he had lost Mexico forever.

I breakfast in the sunny patio of my hotel — a colonial building mounting a stone cross above a carved stone facade. It was a 16th century monastery, across the street from the shady Alameda park where, during the Inquisition, they brought heretics to be burned at the stake.

The hotel is built around a sunny patio with a fountain in the center. The coffee is hot and dark roast. The waiters are friendly. "Buenos dias, Senor. How did you pass the night?"

"Solito. Alone." (A joke. An old joke, but all the waiters laugh. They'd be disappointed if I didn't come up with the punch line.)

A boy comes into the patio. Kneels and begins to shine my shoes.

The street outside was the Tacuba road that crossed the lake. It was barely wide enough for eight horses abreast. Here Cortez retreated on a rainy night in July, 1520.

Two blocks further along was the terrible gap. A portable wooden bridge they'd built was stuck at the first pass. The eyewitness soldier-historian Bernal Diaz wrote:

"The aperture of the water soon filled with dead and dying men and horses, and those struggling to escape, all heaped together, with artillery, packs and bales of luggage and those who carried them.

"It was dreadful to hear the cries of the unfortunate sufferers, calling for assistance and invoking the Holy Virgin or St. Jago. While others who escaped by swimming, or by clambering upon the chests, bales of baggage, and dead bodies, earnestly begged for help to get up to the causeway."

The causeway is shown on the map from Madrid, spread on the sunny table in the Mexican patio. On that night, the Spanish lost 870 men of their army of 1300. If you drive out my street, you can see the ahuehuete tree where Cortez sat and wept as the survivors, wounded and defeated, passed by.

They say an Indian woman -- a street seller of cooked food -- saw the Spanish army moving on the causeway and gave the alarm.

"The white gods are leaving! Out with your canoes and attack them at the bridges!"

There's an Indian lady down at my corner who has an enchilada stand. Sometimes I go down and eat a fiery enchilada. (Doctors warn us not to eat at street stands but if you're standing on the site of history, you've got to take chances.)

Where the Spanish fought to cross the gap of water, the street is called Puente de Alvarado. Pedro de Alvarado, the first lieutenant of Cortez. Brash, fierce. He was blonde (or red-haired) for the Aztecs called him Tonatiuh -- Son of the Sun God.

He commanded the rear guard. He put his lance on the bottom of the lake and vaulted across. The last man. He limped up the road to tell Cortez no more were coming.

Soldier-historian Diaz says: "As to that fatal place which is called the bridge or leap of Alvarado, I aver he could not have leaped it in any manner. A bridge is there and the depth of water will prove no lance could reach the bottom."

Descendants of Alvarado went to court. After hearing testimony, the court decided that Pedro did jump the chasm. The Indians were so astonished they stuffed their mouths with earth -- this being the custom of astonished Aztecs.

My map from Madrid shows where Cortez put the remnants of the army on a hill at the end of the lake causeway. ("Always take the high ground," say the manuals on infantry tactics.)

The Conquistadors took choice pieces of real estate. Cortez got a title from King Carlos V. Alvarado was made Governor of Guatemala. Got himself killed in an insignificant fight with Indians. (He had no business in the action. He simply liked battle.)

The treasure of Aztec gold was never found. Much of it lies under the lake bed. "Right here." I showed the waiters with my finger. "Right here on this map." I astonish them. So I go down to the corner and stuff my mouth with enchiladas -- that being the custom of astonishing tourists.

Vienna buildings reflect glories of Austrian empire

By RICK McCARTHY

Vienna is more than just the capital city of Austria. It is still the hub of an historic empire — if not politically, then at least in the minds of its citizens.

The empire officially ceased to exist in 1918 at the end of World War I and with the death of Emperor Franz Joseph. However, even a short walk along the Ringstrasse downtown fleshes out much of the glory of what was once the Austrian Empire.

In 1857, Franz Joseph I ordered the unneeded ancient walls that protected the city torn down. In their place was built a wide promenade surrounded by magnificent buildings, parks and extensive gardens.

Along the three-mile-long artery rise some of Vienna's great buildings:

The famed State Opera House, destroyed in World War II and now restored to its original grandeur, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Museum of Natural History, the neo-Gothic Town Hall, which is sometimes mistaken for a church because of its block-tall spire, the Burgtheatre, founded more than 200 years ago, the neo-Classic Austrian Parliament Building, and at the southern end of the Ring, the canal which diverts water from the Danube River.

A full-day ticket on one of the many red trolleys that circle the Ring adds up to a marvelous tour of many of Vienna's key attractions. Apart from the splendid buildings on it, this stately avenue is lined with countless statues and monuments which convey much about the history and culture of the city.

However, the real magic of the Austrian capital starts to unfold when one crosses the Ring and enters the inner, or old, town.

This quarter is a world away from the hustle and bustle of 20th century Vienna and its 1.5 million residents. Here, narrow cobblestoned streets and crooked alleys take one past a time barrier to centuries past.

An old town landmark is St. Stephen's Cathedral with its 450-foot spire rising over the entire city.

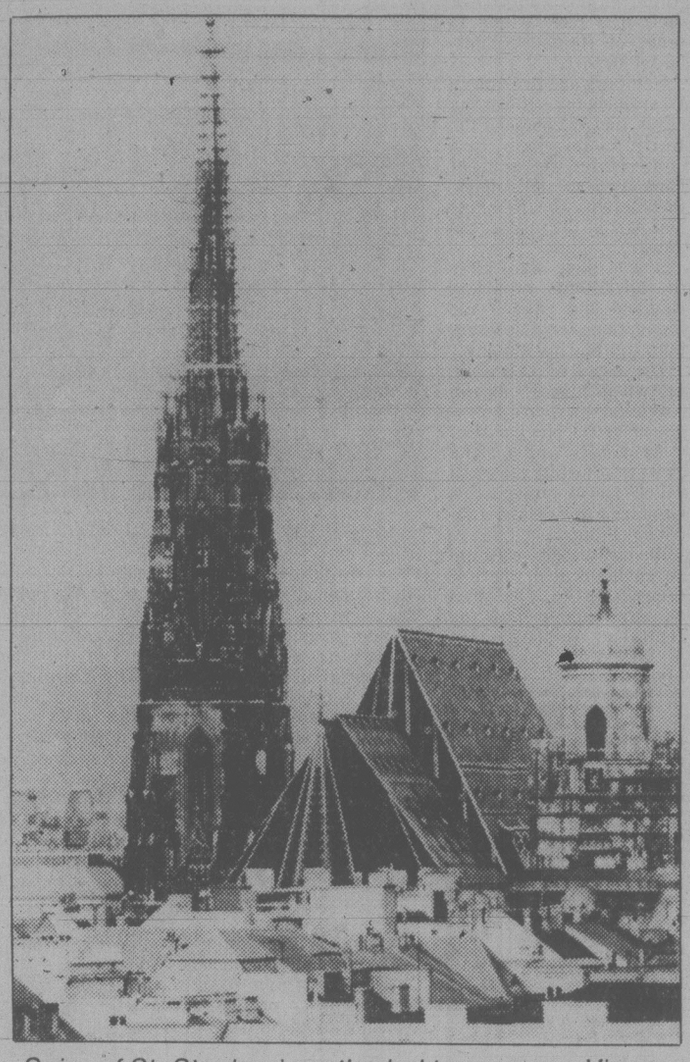
The church was badly damaged by artillery fire during World War II, as were many of Vienna's other great structures, but it has been completely rebuilt.

For a bird's-eye view of the city, one can reach the unfinished 210-foot-tall North Tower by climbing 343 stairs or ride up in a five-passenger elevator.

As majestic as St. Stephen's are the many royal palaces of the inner city.

Vienna was the home of the Hapsburgs who ruled the empire from 1276 to 1918, and the old town was the home of the imperial court.

The court included all of the ruler's relatives and all of them apparently wanted to live as close to him as possible: Each prince, count and duke had a residence in the area.



Spire of St. Stephen's cathedral towers over Vienna

Thus, today's Vienna boasts a collection of palaces and imperial apartments the likes of which exist nowhere else in Europe.

Many of these palaces are now museums. The Hapsburgs were well-travelled and avid art collectors. Vienna's museums — more than 80 of them — house the bulk of the former rulers' vast array of treasures.

The Museum of Fine Arts has a large collection of old masters.

Belvedere Palace, built as a summer residence for Prince Eugene of Savoy to commemorate the defeat of the Turks in 1683, is home to the Austrian Gallery of 19th and 20th century paintings. It also exhibits many examples of Baroque art.

Other museums are devoted to ecclesiastical treasures: royal coaches, including the one in which Archduke Ferdinand was riding when assassinated, clocks and watches, viniculture, musical instruments, and one of the largest graphic arts collections in the world.

There is also a Museum of Military History, one on fire brigades, and even a Circus Museum.

In the burial vault of the Church of the Capuchins, one can see the graves of 140 members of the Hapsburg family, including a dozen emperors.

And, on a busy side street, Berggasse, there is a small museum dedicated to one of Vienna's most famous physicians — Sigmund Freud.

Today the house in which he lived, studied and worked for nearly half a century has been restored and contains many of Freud's personal belongings, including the famous couch on which he treated his patients.

Of all the museums, however, the most awe-inspiring and nostalgic — if that's one way to describe an era 1,000 years back — is the Treasury of the Imperial Palace, housed in the Hofburg, the winter residence of the Hapsburgs.

It's all part of a great capital where pictures of Franz Joseph, who ruled more than a century ago, are still displayed with reverence in many public buildings.

Anglo-Saxon roots in Germany

By ROBERT DIETRICH

HAMBURG — Most North Americans with Anglo names could seek their true roots within 75 miles of Hamburg-Fuhlsbuttel Airport.

Hamburg and Bremen on West Germany's North Sea coast, and Luebeck on the Baltic coast, span, in a semicircle, the ancient homelands of the Angles, the Saxons, the Frisians and part of the land of the Jutes.

It was they, who, after the fall of Rome, swept into England and gave it the foundations for its present language and institutions.

The signs of that folk, known in history as the Anglo-Saxons, are viewable in archaeological sites near rivers and on the great Luneburg Heath which has a provocative similarity to England's Salisbury Plain.

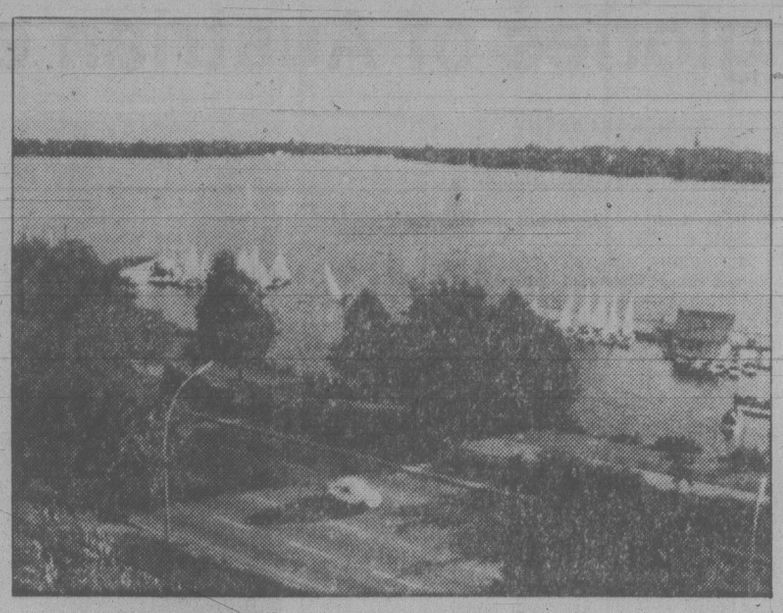
Business logic was apparent in Bremen, where 40 mummies repose in a chamber underneath the central marketplace.

"They were," explained Frau Diethild Putscher, our Bremen guide, "people who were not citizens of Bremen and whose families would not pay for transportation or burial.

"The collection began in 1415," she said, "when a workman from another city died in a fall from the roof of the cathedral. His colleagues placed him in the subterranean celler chamber used to store lead for stained glass windows and contacted his family. The family did not respond. He was forgotten.

"One day much later," Frau Putscher continued, "other workmen found him, perfectly preserved. Until the middle of the 18th century, almost all of our unclaimed bodies were placed there — and similarly preserved."

The legacy of that bit of municipal economy is a collection of figures that accurately reflect the clothing, hairstyles and, in some cases, the cosmetics of their times.



Germany's North Sea ports are home for amateur sailing

The present city council is reportedly pursuing a potentially profitable line of investigation into the properties of that chamber — still undetermined and still capable of mummifying bodies (dead rats and cats are placed there periodically for test purposes).

"There are whispers in the Rathaus about uranium deposits," Frau Putscher told us.

The market square over the mummy chamber is dominated by the 11th century St. Ansgar church, named for the bishop of Hamburg who fled to Bremen in 789 A.D. to escape Viking raiders. Later, with restored courage, he led expeditions that started the Christianization of the Vikings on their homegrounds in Scandinavia.

Nearby is the site of St. Peter's where the first Christian church in North Germany once stood.

Next to St. Ansgar's is the four-story bishop's palace built in the late 11th century.

Flanking the other sides of the square are the Rathaus, completed in 1115, and the seven-story Merchant's Hall.

The fact that the Rathaus celler — the Ratskeller — shares space beneath the marketplace with the notable mummies does not deter the citizens and travelers from flocking there nightly to wine, dine and sing.

In the Middle Ages district called Schnoor, is where Bremen families and shopkeepers do their best to live as the original builders intended.

Schnoor (German for string) got its name because it was the medieval ropemakers' quarter. The corbel arch stone above the entrance to a three-story timber-and-stucco house bears the date 1402.

"One concession to modern times is that no one throws the contents of chamber pots or food scraps onto the streets," Putscher said as we made our way along the narrow, cobbled streets.

Vehicular traffic is also forbidden.

Schnoor was pulverized by Allied bombers during Second World War and was put back together again by people who would not let it remain dead.

"Each brick, each piece of stone, was numbered and put back in the proper place," our guide told us.

Romania seeking to attract western tourists

By GARRY FAIRBAIRN

BUCHAREST (CP) — Each year, at the dawn of the last Sunday in July, Romanian alpenhorns sound on Mount Gaina in Transylvania.

Echoing across the wooded mountain peaks, their ancient call — perhaps heard by Roman centurions two millennia ago — summons a winding stream of people through the morning mist up to a plateau for the "Maidens' Fair."

Once an extremely practical means of finding a spouse, where young women would be on view in all their traditional finery, the fair — Tirgul de Fete Gaina — now is one of hundreds of Romanian folkloric festivals that captivate tourists.

Often overlooked by North Amrican tourists because it is behind the Iron Curtain, Romania is making great efforts to let Westerners know that the historic nation is not a typical Warsaw pact country.

Although bureaucracy thrives in the Communist country, arriving tourists can get a visa at Bucharest airport with no prior notice and can wander by themselves in a rented car, without travel restrictions or any requirement for a guide.

Officials also stress linguistic and cultural similarities between the West and Romania.

"It is a Latin island in a Slavic sea," with the nearest other Latin people 2,000 kilometres away, says Radu Constantinescu, assistant director of mass culture.

In an interview, he noted that 73 per cent of Romanian words have Latin origins, the result of Roman legionnaires who began settling in the area after conquering the Dacians about 106 AD.

Proud of preserving their unique mix of Dacian and Latin traditions, Romanians cite two ancient triumphal monuments as "birth certificates of the Roman people."

In addition to 2,000 years of monuments, Transylvanian castles, churches and festivals, Romania offers extensive Black Sea resorts, Danube Delta tours, health spas and skiing.

Those were enough to attract five million tourists last year, a dramatic increase from the 100,000 visitors of 1960.

Tourism this year is running about 27 per cent ahead of last year and Romanian officials say they hope to attract many North Americans and others on their way to or from the Moscow Olympics in 1980, the year Romania celebrates the 2,050th anniversary of its first centralized and independent government.

Unfortunately, Constantinescu says, among last year's five million visitors there were only 5,000 Canadians, three-fourths of them coming primarily on business.

"Canada is still a faraway country, out of reach. Far from us to blame it on the Canadians, we think we are to blame for it. We have not found a proper channel of communication."

In their desire to encourage tourism — especially from hard-currency Western countries — the developing nation has put much effort into building hotels, setting up discos and pinball arcades at resorts, and even persuading some festivals to move from isolated villages to more accessible towns.

A corps of 5,000 multilingual guides is available and service staff are being trained in various languages.

While many of the older generation speak French, says manager Marin Fopa of the tourism ministry's overseas department, most of the younger generation are choosing English as one of their two compulsory foreign languages.

"Youths today have followed world tendencies and have learned the language which is the key to communication and information sources. Thus over 70 per cent of the students take English."

With the majority of Romania's visitors being able to speak English, that development will do much to make a Romanian holiday more convenient.

But tourists should not expect always to get North American standards of lodging and service, officials say.

The lodging problem is more easily solved, Fopa says. About 9,000 new hotel beds are added each year and "we do not doubt that soon we will reach genuine international standards.",

The harder task, he says, is ensuring good service.

"We can build a hotel in one year any time. But to train a good cook and good front-desk workers takes much longer. Schooling takes two years and courses are still not enough — experience is needed."

Romanian desk clerks, indeed, too often seem more like suspicious bureaucrats than like smiling hosts.

Foreign complaints also have centred on the boxlike Black Sea hotels, where different nationalities are often effectively segregated by being put in different hotels — distinguishable sometimes only by the number on the building — where all meals are included in the cost.

But so long as the sun shines, a New York Times reviewer wrote recently, resorts like Mamaia have "a well-regulated aspect that is good for families and children."

RENO TOURS

Departures Sunday Mornings $180 Dbl., $190 Twin

Obviously the "Onslow" Hotel in Reno is extremely popular. Charter Buses and drivers are doing a great job to please our customers, and our amiable Escorts continue to make our Reno Tours the best available. We do have room for two couples on May 25th, and there is space available on the June departures. However, don't leave it too long, we hate to see anyone disappointed.

ROCKIES TOUR

May 21 to 31, Eleven Fine Days $375 Dbl., $395 Twin

It's very important to be at the right place at the right time. The Canadian Rockies at this time of year fits right in. The Mountains are crowned with snow, the rivers and streams are active, the fresh green grass and leaves indicate the arrival of Spring in the most beautiful areas of the world. Also, it's very important that the tourist hordes have not yet arrived. If you want to be "The right person in the right place at the right time," give us a call. We can accommodate six more couples.

PORTLAND ROSE PARADE

June 13 to 16. Colour Galore $150 Dbl., $160 Twin View this most colourful floral parade from the convenience of your own hotel without having to get up extremely early to go to the colliseum to view the parade. We're a short stroll from famous Lloyd Centre for post-parade shopping, too. Our return trip is along the mighty Columbia River into the State of Washington to Yakima, Wenatchee, lovely Ohme Gardens, the Bavarian Village and scenic Stevens Pass. We can accommodate four couples.

ALASKA BUS/CRUISES

June 18 and 22, July 16 and 20 $785 Dbl., $800 Twin

We're proud to be able to offer these four timely departures on such a fine Cruise Ship as the "Odessa". It's a deluxe ship with excellent service and entertainment, offering roomy staterooms, swimming pool, medical facilities and comfortable lounges, served by extremely efficient and pleasant staff. The Bus portion of the tour presents a thrilling view of central and Northern B.C. and the Yukon Territories along the famous Alaska Highway, with tours of the Gold Rush Town of Barkerville and famous Bennett Dam en route. We have limited space on all four departures at the moment, but don't delay as they are filling fast. Don't be disappointed.

Whirl around Manitoba this summer!

This summer see this giant windmill at Steinbach and taste fresh bread made from the flour ground by this wind-powered grist mill—the only one in Canada. Head up to mighty Lake Winnipeg and soak up some sun on miles and miles of soft, sandy beaches at Grand Beach.

Roll into Winnipeg and see where we make money—it's Canada's newest Royal Canadian Mint but, sorry, no free samples! Say "bonjour!" to French-speaking Manitobans in St. Boniface, the French district of Winnipeg. Stop at Louis Riel's grave in St. Boniface, too.

Spend some time in eastern Manitoba. Breathe in the pine scents of some of the most beautiful lake and forest country in North America in scenic eastern Manitoba. The fishing's great, too, and you'll find lots of facilities and places to stay, from lakeside resorts to fully-equipped camp and trailer grounds.

Explore underground tunnels at Caddy Lake in a rented canoe. See huge stone mosaics created by Indians almost 1000 years ago. Swim in West Hawk Lake, a 365-foot deep lake that is also a giant meteorite crater! Discover history, culture, great people and places all over Manitoba this summer.

Fate dealt her a bad hand but Gerri beat the odds

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Deaf since birth, five-foot, two-inch Gerri Ehrlich has beaten some big odds in the city known as the Green Felt Jungle.

Believed to be the only deaf card dealer in Las Vegas, the bubbly 26-year-old brunette has cracked a closed society.

"It's a Cinderella story," said her mother June, who taught both of her deaf daughters to speak.

"I never dreamed it would ever happen," said Gerri, who overcame a string of setbacks before landing a job at one of the largest casinos in Las Vegas.

Through lip-reading, she communicates with players at her table, most of whom seldom detect her handicap. "Once in a while there are complaints that I don't answer all the questions but after the pit boss explains to them, they're very understanding," she said.

Her struggle began at birth, with nerve deafness. At 18 months she almost died of arsenic poisoning when she accidentally swallowed a rat pesticide. Three years ago, when she decided to become a dealer, potential employers rejected her because of her hearing handicap.

"I went through a lot," said the hazel-eyed native of West Van Nuys, Calif. "It takes a lot of energy out of you to become something."

But, she said, "I'm a fighter. I don't feel I'm handicapped."

Instead of isolating herself from the public, Gerri tackled her challenge head-on. But the demand for a deaf dealer in a city that employs 45,000 dealers, 300 new ones a day, was limited.

"She picked a hard way to go," said her mother. "Las Vegas is a tough town to break into."

Making a meagre living while working two jobs at a deaf school, she enrolled in a dealing school and went job hunting.

After encountering resistance because of her hearing problem, she finally got a job at one of the smaller downtown casinos.

From there, she moved to the Golden Nugget for more than a year but quit when a pit boss berated her in front of several patrons. Nine months ago, she was hired by the Hilton Flamingo, on the neon-splashed Strip.

"I flunked my first two auditions," said Gerri. "I'd get so nervous.

Horsing around to tune of $3.3M

BINGLEY, England (UPI) — Lovesick supermarket worker Paul Hudson wanted the woman in his life to have everything.

Posing as a millionaire Canadian stud farm owner, he went around the country bouncing cheques totalling more than $3.3 million, a prosecution lawyer told Bingley court.

His purchases on the spree included 10 horses valued at more than $22,000. But Hudson, 48, was a penniless supermarket worker.

"I convinced her I could sell my stud farm in Canada. I completely brainwashed her," Hudson said in a statement. "She loved and trusted me and believed in me wholeheartedly."

He was remanded without bail.

Hostage mom set to kneel and beg

Times News Services

TEHRAN — The mother of one of the 50 American hostages held in Tehran said today she is prepared to go down on her knees before Ayatollah Khomeini to plead for the release of her son.

"But I want people to realize that to see Kevin (Marine Sgt. Kevin Hermening) is not the sole reason for my being here," Mrs. Barbara Timm, of Oak Creek, Wis., told a news conference after she arrived in Tehran.

"I want desperately to see Kevin, but nearly as much to understand the Iranians and what they have against the American people."

Mrs. Timm, 40, is accompanied by her husband, Kenneth Timm, the 20-year-old marine's stepfather, and an attorney, Carl McAfee. They came in defiance of President Carter's ban on travel to Iran.

The party got visas valid for 15 days at the Iranian Embassy in Paris.

Mrs. Timm accused Washington officials of blocking all her efforts to telephone the Moslem militant captors who have occupied the U.S. Embassy since Nov. 4.

She said she was warned that her words would be twisted by Iran and used as propaganda. But when she phoned from Paris to the U.S. embassy in Tehran, "students answered me and made no effort to make propaganda out of my talk [illegible]."

The White House fears visits by the hostages' relatives might be "very cynically used and manipulated by the Iranians," a Washington source said, but it was unclear how Carter's ban will be applied to the captives' families.

Mrs. Timm said she was totally against any military action by the United States to release the hostages. "I don't want to see any of the hostages killed and I don't want one Iranian to die."

Meanwhile, appealing for an end to Iranian "terrorism," the wives and mothers of four other American hostages announced Friday in Washington that they will go to Europe next week to press for increased allied support to gain the captives' release.

Moslem radicals want leftist purge

By BOB DOUGLAS

TEHRAN (CP) — Unrest by militant Moslem students at universities in Tabriz and Tehran signal an impending Moslem "cultural revolution" in educational institutions and illustrate an increasingly hard line toward left-wing groups in Iran.

The announcement of the Revolutionary Council today that all "non-Islamic groups" must close their university offices within the next three days, signals a growing conflict.

Moslem students seized the central administration building at the Tabriz University earlier this week and demanded a purge of left-wing student, academic and administrative groups while the Islamic Society of the University of Science and Industry in Tehran called for a complete shut down of the university until "anti-revolutionary elements" had been purged.

The new unrest follows revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini's message at the recent Iranian new year celebrations calling for an end to anti-Islamic and anti-revolutionary elements in the universities.

The government has been increasingly critical of left-wing groups in Iran.

While conservative Moslem and leftist organizations joined forces to overthrow shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi last year they have been gradually drifting apart.

Such groups as the leftist Fedayan and the Moslem Socialist Mujahedin parties are strongly based in the universities. Proportionately, they draw more support from the universities than they do from the general population.

The Tabriz University incident erupted after Hojjatoleslam Hashemi Rafsanjani, a Revolutionary Council member, was forced to abandon a talk he was to give there because of objections from "opposition groups."

Tehran newspapers also said the Moslem students broke into the political headquarters of other groups and tore up books and broke windows.

A spokesman for the Moslem students said there was "supposed to be a thorough change at the cultural level" after the revolution in universities. That had not happened so the Rafsanjani incident gave the Islamic students the incentive to do something about it, he said.

The revolutionary guards and government officials in Tabriz supported the student takeover.

But Hassan Habibi, minister of culture and higher education, rejected the student request for an immediate shutdown of Tabriz University until a purge is carried out. Habibi said the school should stay open until the end of the year.

A spokesman for the Islamic society students at Tehran's University of Science and Industry said there should be a thorough change at the school to carry out "Islamicization of the university."

But the Mujahedin students said they have documents showing the Islamic society students met in a building behind the United States Embassy to plan a purge of "progressive and revolutionary forces."

Many of the students involved in the American Embassy takeover are members of the Islamic society.

Gov't foes jailed

TAIPEI (AP) — A military court has convicted eight executives of a former opposition magazine and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from 12 years to life for sedition and plotting to overthrow the Nationalist Chinese regime. The defendants admitted seeking to replace Taiwan's one party rule with a multi-party system, but denied plotting to forcibly overthrow the Kuomintang, which has ruled Taiwan since 1949.

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

POINT OF VIEW

A reader who prefers to remain anonymous has written me as follows: "I was playing in a weekend tournament against a youngster rated well above me. We had struggled for two hours without discernible advantage. Then I found a combination that won at least the exchange — good old Knight fork. When the point became clear to him, he left the board with his clock running. He returned, visibly upset.

'What's wrong, Joe?' I asked, genuinely concerned.

'That's a great move,' he answered, 'and if you win I lose 20 rating points.'

'Don't worry,' I answered, 'I'll probably make a big mistake later. Even if I don't, 20 points are statistically insignificant.'

His face contorted with rage and he pounded the table. He almost shouted: 'Not to me, they're not!'

I happened to win that game."

CHESS & COMPUTERS

Computers are the up and coming thing in chess. Until recently, they have not been taken seriously in chess circles, but now technology is mass-producing computers capable of defeating the average chess player. Think of it! Beaten by a machine!

Soon, chess-playing computers will be common for the computer revolution is here. However, while they can beat beginners, computers still have a way to go to beat the best human chess players. Some experts still doubt that a computer will ever beat a Grandmaster, though I have seen them beat Grandmasters at rapid chess (5-second-a-move or 5-minute chess) because chess is not completely logical. There is an aspect of art and intuition which they believe can never be reproduced in a computer program. Only time will tell if they are right.

THE DAILY COLONIST AND VICTORIA TIMES

Before the judge

A Seattle man was given a 15-day jail sentence Friday in Victoria provincial court for a 2½-hour driving exhibition Thursday night on Greater Victoria streets.

John Richard Walker, 29, pleaded guilty to dangerous driving, impaired driving, failing to report property damage, and two counts of failing to remain at the scene of an accident.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told Judge Blake Allan the series of incidents began at about 7:50 p.m. when Walker's vehicle knocked over a sign on a traffic island and flattened some shrubbery at Cedar Hill Cross Road south of McKenzie.

About 20 minutes later, Walker was travelling south on the Pat Bay Highway in the 5700-block when he passed a vehicle on the inside and cut in front of it, clipping a fender and causing about $100 damage. Walker didn't bother to stop, Mulligan added.

At about 10:25, Walker was stopped at a red traffic light and was reving his motor waiting for the signal to turn green. However, his car rolled backwards and hit a vehicle driven by Constable Ian Hooey of Esquimalt police. Hooey had honked his horn warning Walker of the impending accident.

As the off-duty officer was about to speak to Walker, the light turned green and he roared off. A chase began with Walker changing lanes at speeds up to 80 kmh, court was told.

At Blanshard and Caledonia, Walker's vehicle fishtailed across the intersection, forcing a number of drivers to take evasive action.

Speeds reached 120 kmh before Walker reached Blanshard and Hillside. There, all northbound lanes were blocked by traffic and Walker went over the curb to go around, nearly sideswiping another car.

Saanich police took up the chase at the Pat Bay Highway and eventually got Walker stopped by placing police vehicles in front and behind him in a "box."

Walker told police he had been drinking since 2 a.m. that day and subsequent breath test readings of .25 and .24 were obtained.

Mulligan also informed the court Walker was facing drinking-driving charges in Tukwila, Wash., and was intending to go to Virginia to work as soon as some funds arrived in the mail.

Duty legal aid lawyer Steven Kelliher said Walker had been on Vancouver Island for about a month on vacation and was drinking with friends at the Six Mile House beer parlor that day.

He said Walker didn't remember getting into his car nor much about what happened that night.

Allan imposed 15-day jail terms on all charges, to be served concurrently, and ordered that Washington state and Canadian immigration authorities be notified on the proceedings.

Judge William Ostler handed out concurrent, one- and six-month jail terms to a 47-year-old Sooke man who pleaded guilty to his eighth and ninth drinking-driving charges since Oct. 17, 1962.

Harry Eric Liddle, of 1993 Kaltasin, changed his pleas to guilty on March 31 and April 2 charges of impaired driving.

The March 31 incident took place at 9:45 p.m. after Liddle was caught speeding by a radar trap on Sooke Road. Subsequent breath test readings of .20 and .19 were obtained, crown counsel Don Laughton said.

On April 2, Liddle's vehicle was found in a dtich shortly after 3 p.m. at Strandlund and Selwyn. Youths at the scene told Colwood RCMP they had seen the driver running down the road. Liddle was apprehended and readings of .23 and .22 were obtained.

Liddle received four fines — the last one of $1,200 on Aug. 23, 1978 — and three jail terms for his previous impaired convictions.

"I know I definitely have a drinking problem," Liddle admitted.

Ostler said he would strongly recommend Liddle's sentences be served at the Alouette River unit where he could receive treatment for his alcoholism.

A 17-year-old, Grade 11 student at Stelly's Secondary School pleaded guilty to his second and third drinking-driving convictions in less than two months and was fined a total of $200, ordered to perform 200 hours of community service work, and banned from driving for one year.

Barry Colin Sam, of 1274 Stelly's Cross Road, pleaded guilty to two counts of impaired driving.

He was stopped shortly after midnight, Oct. 6, by a BATvan roadblock at Lochside and Bakerview, and two readings of .16 each were obtained.

On Oct. 31, Sam was stopped by Sidney RCMP after making a wide turn at Beacon Avenue and Pat Bay Highway at 3:20 a.m. This time, the readings were .16 and .15.

Sam was convicted of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 March 11 and received a one-day jail term, 30 hours of community service work, six months probation, and a six-month driving prohibition.

Kelliher said Sam was heavily involved in sports and did not think he had a drinking problem.

Ostler levied fines of $50 and $150 and also placed Sam on probations of one and two years.

A 19-year-old youth was fined a total of $200 in connection with a Feb. 18 incident at Spectrum Community School, 957 West Burnside.

Sheldon John Scott, of 280 Wilfert, was fined $50 after pleading guilty to causing a disturbance by shouting and another $150 after pleading guilty to wilfully setting a false fire alarm.

Court was told Scott and some companions were in the school about 2:45 p.m., shouting and disturbing classes as well as the general public which was there because it was federal election day and the school was being used as a polling station. The shouting was so loud the principal had to interrupt a meeting he was attending to find out what the problem was.

The youths then ran and Scott pulled a fire alarm in the building, Mulligan said.

Scott was chased and apprehended by staff members and, when asked by Saanich police why he did it, replied, "Why does anyone have a reason for doing anything? Why do you climb a mountain?"

Scott admitted he was not a student at the school but had a girlfriend attending classes. He said he was denied a right to visit her.

Blood donors top mark

Victorians responded in large numbers to last week's plea from the Red Cross for blood donors.

From the five clinics held in Victoria 1,643 units of blood were collected, well over the goal of 1,000 units.

The Red Cross says this response has made a considerable contribution to re-establishing a safety margin in the province's blood supply.

Two high schools established new records for their clinics. Dunsmuir school had 403 donors and Belmont school collected 367 units. The HMC Dockyard drew 319 donors on Friday.

The remainder of the blood was collected during two clinics at Red Cross House.

Priest banned over book

CAPE TOWN (Reuter) — Rev. David Russell, an Anglican priest banned under threat of a 12-month prison sentence, has been found guilty of possessing an outlawed publication, a book about the late black activist leader Steve Biko.

A magistrates court found Father Russell, 41, guilty of possessing the book and of two charges of violating the order banning him. He pleaded guilty to two of the charges but denied one of breaking his banning order.

The super secret RCMP securities service should make greater efforts to inform the public about the nature of its operations, the author of a new book on the service says.

John Sawatsky said in an interview the public has little knowledge of the section which is charged with protecting national security.

"You can't support something you're ignorant of," the 31-year-old journalist said. "In some sense the security service is not supported simply because no one knows about it.

"If the public realized the extent of espionage activity in this country then I think they would accept the need for it."

Sawatsky has done more than anyone in recent years to stimulate public awareness of Mountie activities.

In 1976, while a reporter with the Vancouver Sun in Ottawa, he broke the story of RCMP involvement in a break-in at the Agence Press Libre du Quebec office in Montreal.

That subsequently lead to the establishment of the McDonald Commission which began its inquiry into the RCMP in mid-1978.

Sawatsky's book, Men in the Shadows, deals with the inner workings of the security service and does not go into illegal police activities exposed by the commission.

He said he wants to dispel myths about the service — that the members are a bunch of conspiratorial people or a group inherently evil. Neither is correct.

"It is composed of men who share the same frustrations and inadequacies of anyone in the bureaucracy."

While the service's technical expertise is one of the best in the world, he said its members are woefully weak in understanding the political significance of what they do.

"Basically the shortcoming is the type of people in it. They joined the RCMP to be cops and not to become involved in cloak and dagger intrigue.

"Most have trouble understanding the groups they are surveying. They have no grasp of the political philosophy of the groups and don't even know the difference between a dissident and a subversive."

He said the paramilitary structure of the RCMP discourages original or innovative thinking and places the service at a disadvantage in dealing with the highly sophisticated Russian KGB and GRU intelligence units, the service's principle adversaries.

AirCan in-flight movie to promote province

The B.C. tourism ministry is taking to the air in an attempt to attract visitors to the province.

Travel films produced by Tourism B.C. will be shown on Air Canada flights through a cost-sharing agreement with the national airline.

First film to be shown — This is the Place, a 14-minute film showing the coast from Vancouver through the Sechelt Peninsula and Jervis Inlet to Garibaldi Park — won the best travel film award at the National Outdoor Writers' Association convention.

"A most attractive feature of this new promotion plan is that you have a captive audience in an aircraft to view a film, and so we are assured of convincing them to visit B.C.," Tourism Minister Pat Jordan said in a news release.

Gov't aid on plant 'too late' — it closes

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Maplewood Poultry processing plant in Abbotsford, B.C., will close despite a government offer to keep the plant in operation, owner Brian Hambley said Friday.

The closure may only last a week, said Hambley, because he intends to make a careful study of a government offer of aid before making a final decision on the future of the plant and its 135 employees.

The government said it will purchase $250,000 worth of turkeys and broilers in an effort to prevent the plant from closing.

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said in Victoria the government also is prepared to pick up, in the short term, 50 per cent of the operating losses of the plant — up to $20,000 a week for five weeks.

Hambley said the offer comes too late to avoid a shutdown. He said letters have gone out to all employees informing them of developments.

He also said that, in light of the offer from the government, the company will continue to seek other means whereby the the plant could reopen.

The minister said the $20,000 a week is "a sharing of the loss" so that Hambley has to "look at also covering part of that loss."

Ship welcomes public

Officers and crew of the Australian destroyer escort HMAS Yarra will be opening up their ship to public inspection Sunday.

The Open House, or rather Open Ship, will be from 2:30 to 5:30 p.m.

The ship is moored at A jetty in Esquimalt naval dockyard.

The Yarra arrived Thursday — the first Australian ship to visit Victoria since 1976 — fresh from exercises at Long Beach and San Diego to test out a new Australian sonar device for anti-submarine purposes.

Cadets at Royal Roads Military College have challenged the crew to a rugby game on Sunday.

The Yarra will be joined by the New Zealnd frigate HMNZS Otago on Monday and the two will sail for Vancouver the next day for a special command ANZAC day commemoration service on Thursday.

Both countries remember their war dead on that day.

Festival correction

The Greater Victoria Musical Festival's school dance honor performance will be held Thursday, May 1, at Central Junior Secondary.

It was erroneously reported in the Times Friday that it would be held tonight at Lansdowne Junior Secondary. There are no festival performances at Lansdowne tonight.

Indian health care goes to B.C.?

Health Minister Rafe Mair says he will ask the federal government to hand over responsibility for health care for B.C.'s Indians to the provincial government.

Mair said Friday he will meet federal Health Minister Monique Begin next week to discuss the matter.

"We don't draw the distinction of people in B.C. because of their race, color, creed or age or anything like that," Mair said. "They are all people and they are all entitled to the same kind of health care — We think they (Indians) should be treated as British Columbians and therefore the care for them should be a provincial matter not a federal one and we are prepared to assume that responsibility."

The minister said if Ottawa agrees to the request he would expect the federal government to increase its share of the costs.

Refugee increase

BANGKOK (AP) — The number of boat people from Vietnam arriving in other Southeast Asian countries increased from 2,910 in February to 4,762 in March, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees announced. A spokesman said 1,057 more fled overland from Laos and Vietnam to Thailand in March.

Doubled airport top priority

The ministry of transport has placed a top priority on expanding Victoria International Airport, the Times has learned.

An MOT construction proposal, which will go to the treasury board for approval, would double the size of the Pat Bay terminal.

Construction would be carried out in stages.

Jack McKernan, chairman of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce task force on airport expansion, today praised the announcement as "the first firm indication we are going to get some action."

But the MOT report also indicates Victoria will have to adjust to the idea it is not an international airport and probably never will be.

The federal government has said the word "International" must be removed from the airport's title. The MOT has delayed taking action out of deference to the feelings of the Victoria community.

This is the construction plan that will go to Treasury Board for approval:

— First, spend $250,000 to re-locate about half a kilometre of Willingdon Road to make way for the new terminal. (Willingdon is a private MOT road that goes from the airport to the Pat Bay waterfront. The new terminal would be constructed where Willingdon joins the ring road, to the west of the present terminal building.)

— Second, spend $1 million to build a new arrival apron to the north of where the new terminal building will be. The MOT argues that the apron must be installed before the terminal is expanded. It is no help to have a terminal if planes can not taxi up to it. In the meantime, the new apron can be used in connection with the present terminal.

— Third, spend $2 million to build a new terminal building, twinning the present structure. The new building would be for arrivals while all the space in the present building would be for baggage and departures. The two buildings would be connected by a covered walkway.

— Fourth, eventually the two structures would be joined and the outdoor baggage area would go under cover. The outdoor baggage facility has a low priority in the MOT plan.

There is no firm timetable in the report but the MOT is hopeful construction could get under way within a year.

The road re-location work could be done this year. There is no allowance for it in the 1980-81 estimates but because $250,000 is a modest amount, the funds could easily be found and the project has a high priority.

The MOT will ask for funds for the apron and the terminal expansion in the 1981-82 estimates. This would allow work on both projects to get under way next year.

McKernan said the proposal is fairly modest and therefore is something Ottawa could accept.

Iran tough on oil

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iran has stopped oil shipments to Portugal and is discussing selling oil to the Soviet Union following growing Western support for U.S. economic sanctions against this country, says Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar.

Moinfar said in a telephone interview today oil shipments have been halted to Portugal after that country announced backing for the U.S. trade embargo. There are signs Australia and Denmark may follow suit.

Meanwhile, Japan faces a cutoff of Iranian oil Monday unless it agrees to a price increase demanded by the National Iranian Oil Co., Japanese government sources said today.

They said the shipments will almost certainly cease because Japanese importers, heeding the government's advice, will refuse to pay the extra $2.50 a barrel.

Already high oil prices have sent Japan's international trade into a record $2.45 billion deficit after years of surpluses, a finance ministry said Friday.

In Tehran, meanwhile, thousands of high school students joined university students in a new wave of political unrest.

Informed sources said several colleges, including Tehran's teachers college, changed hands several times as rival student groups fought for control following a government move to kick out "anti-Islamic" elements from universities.

The governing Revolutionary Council has ordered all political groups to close their university offices in the next three days or the government will do it by force. (For a closer look at these developments, see page 61.)

Meanwhile, a senior Iranian official denied today that revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had ever said the U.S. Embassy hostages would be held until after this year's American presidential election.

President Carter said Friday he had reports that the ayatollah had said the hostages, held since last Nov. 4, would not be freed before the U.S. elections in November.

Woman tiger finally netted

Esquimalt police are heaving a sigh of relief a 31-year-old woman charged with a series of hit and run accidents Friday afternoon is safe and sound . . . in the Victoria police women's lockup.

Police said the woman kicked and clawed at three officers who went to arrest her and later while they were booking her into the lockup bit one of the officers, Constable Jim Askew, so hard on the ankle he had to be taken to hospital for treatment and injections.

Askew is still hobbling this morning from the attack.

Police picked up the woman in connection with three hit and run accidents shortly before 2 p.m.

Police said two cars were rammed outside 874 Flemming and third hit in the 800-block Colville by a car which then left the scene. Damage was estimated at about $1,000.

Officers found the car outside an apartment on Fisgard and went in to get the suspect.

The woman, whose name was not released, has been charged with three counts of hit and run, dangerous driving, impaired driving by drugs, assault causing bodily harm, obstructing police and resisting arrest, assaulting a police officer and driving while prohibited.

Pierre's plan 'preposterous'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — It's not often Ed Broadbent gets an invitation to snub the Prime Minister of Canada.

Pierre Trudeau gave him that chance Friday and the NDP leader grabbed it and loved it.

Trudeau admitted to reporters at his first weekly news conference of the new Parliament that there was some truth to reports that the Liberals were interested in some kind of "working alliance" with the NDP to offset their lack of representation in western Canada.

The press raced to find Broadbent. The NDP leader, feigning a mixture of puzzlement and outrage, said he had no idea where such rumors might have originated. His party was not at all interested. In fact the New Democrats find the whole idea "utterly preposterous."

Hard as he tried to look astonished, Broadbent was clearly in a state of suppressed glee.

"It seems strange to me that a party that favors high interest rates and is drifting toward small "c" conservativism should be looking for an alliance with our party," he said. "I would think on most policies they'd be more likely to look to the Conservative Party as an ally than to us.

"To have such discussions, even in principle, at a time of majority government is something that could only be done in the most frivolous way."

Trudeau had left himself wide open for the snub. He admitted that some members of his party are horrified by the idea of an alliance with the New Democrats, but said he personally finds it acceptable at a time when his party desperately needs a voice in the West.

Meanwhile, John Crosbie, former Conservative finance minister, says he was disgusted by federal Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's announcement that the new Liberal government will not bring down a budget until fall at the earliest.

"My reaction is one of contempt and disgust because this was a party that defeated the budget that we had offered," Crosbie said. "Surely they must have had alternatives."

Shopowners bubble

Peter Gregory summed it up best.

"Beautiful," he replied when asked for his reaction to Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen's announcement Friday that the province is considering opening up wine sales to the private sector.

"I'd sure like to have it," said Gregory, co-owner of Little Gem Grocery, 148 Superior.

His sentiment was shared by virtually every small grocery store and delicatessen owner the Times contacted in a random survey Friday.

Nielsen said the provincial government may be shifting some sales of alcoholic beverages to the private sector, in stages.

The demand for exotic wines is growing and there is not enough room on LDB store shelves — so the government will open a specialty wine shop. Soon, private enterprise may be allowed to operate wine shops, with prices fixed by the government. Further participation by private enterprise in sales of other alcoholic beverages might be allowed at some time in the future.

"It would be a really great thing," said an enthusiastic Barbara Sletvik, owner of Brandywine in Colwood. "We even have the name to go with it."

"A great idea," echoed Sandra Hutchings of International Gourmet Deli, 747 Fort. "What a boost it would be for all of us."

'Peace a woman's job'

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Betty Williams shudders at the thought of ever being considered a feminist.

But she remains convinced about one thing: when it comes to making peace, well, that's a woman's job, not a man's.

She hardly needs to prove her point. She and life-long friend Mairead Corrigan were recipients of the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize for their work in organizing Northern Ireland's Peace People movement.

Williams will be in Victoria Sunday. Her visit, sponsored by the Victoria branches of Amnesty International and World Federalists, includes a talk at Metropolitan United Church. (See page 27 for further details.)

In a phone interview from Vancouver she told the Times her message is simply this: women have to start to take a bigger role if there is ever going to be peace in the world.

"Look at this way, we are the givers of life, and because of that we have got to be the protectors of life, too."

That's the basis of the dramatic mothers' marches to end the senseless internecine hostilities in Northern Ireland.

It was the horror that went on before that sparked formation of the movement in 1976.

Williams had her own share of grief. Two cousins, one 18 and the other 21, died at the hands of terrorists. She herself lost an eardrum in a bomb blast shopping in Belfast. She was lucky. The woman in front of her got 90 stitches in her face. Three others were blown to bits.

Pension boost bill introduced

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill to increase by $35 a month the guaranteed income supplement paid to 1.3 million needy pensioners was introduced in the Commons on Friday.

The bill would increase the current supplement to at least $188 a month.

The legislation honors one of the main promises made by the Liberals during the Feb. 18 election campaign and Health Minister Monique Begin said she expects the legislation to be approved in time for the increase to appear on cheques this July.

The supplement is paid to Canada's neediest pensioners in addition to the universal old age security.

Asbestos Corp. fights back

By LEW DIGGS

MONTREAL (CP) — Lawyers for Asbestos Corp. Ltd. argued Friday that an obscure 1868 Quebec law knocks the wind out of the province's special asbestos expropriation act — and perhaps a slew of other laws.

The argument appeared at first to be a minor point in the company's wide-ranging case against expropriation, as lawyers emptied their legal cannisters against the government during pleas in Quebec Superior Court.

But the debate, and remarks by Chief Justice Jules Deschenes, indicated it could be a legal bombshell.

If the company is right, it appears the door could be open to attacks on numerous provincial laws, on grounds they conflict with rights "guaranteed" — although no one noticed for 100 years — by the Quebec Civil Code.

"It's a limited constitutional entrenchment of rights similar to the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Quebec Charter of Human Rights," company lawyer John Claxton contended.

The 1868 statute, which has been sleeping on the books for a century, gives many clauses of the Civil Code, which governs everything from marriage to property and contracts, the status of basic rights.

One code provision, based on the French Napoleonic Code, says no citizen's property can be expropriated without "prior payment of a just indemnity."

This conflicts with the expropriation law, which gives the provincial cabinet power to order a snap takeover of the company's $105 million in Quebec assets, leaving the issue of payment to be determined by a three-man tribunal later.

Normally, the expropriation act would take precedence over the more general provisions in the code. But lawyer Claxton, after extensive legal research, dredged up a section of Quebec's 1868 law on the interpretation of statutes.

It says any clauses of the Civil Code take precedence over subsequent legislation, unless the code provisions are specifically repealed. Similar clauses are contained in the Canadian and Quebec human rights charters.

Claxton said that, to his knowledge, this key section of the 1868 interpretion law had never been repealed.

As the argument was being spun out, Chief Justice Deschenes interrupted to observe that many laws had been passed in the last century which might conflict with the Civil Code, but which had not specifically repealed the code's relevant clauses. They "might therefore be challenged."

Later, he asked for precise evidence that the 1868 statute had never been repealed, telling the lawyer: "You're putting the court in the difficult position of having to reach a far-reaching conclusion on the basis of speculation."

ROCKIN' ROLLERS took to the rink with a disco beat Friday night at the Oak Bay Recreation Centre, where changing seasons have turned winter's curling rink into summer's roller rink. Opening night special was free admittance to anyone wearing a funny hat, and what with the current popularity of roller skates, and pop music on the sound system, it was a full house for both sessions.

Davis ready to enter fray

MONTREAL (CP) — Reports that Ontario Premier William Davis plans to come to Quebec to campaign in the sovereignty-association referendum drew responses Friday from both Premier Rene Levesque, leader of the yes forces, and Claude Ryan, leader of the no.

Levesque, who spent the day repeating already-familiar campaign messages in suburban Montreal, said Davis can come if he wants to.

But he warned Davis' presence might hinder the no side by creating the impression the federalist forces are desperate as the May 20 vote approaches.

"If some guy is going to come from outside and tell (people) what to do, I don't think it takes very well," Levesque said. "Could you see me going to Ontario as the premier of Quebec and telling them: 'Look why don't you kick out Bill Davis's government?'"

Ryan, also campaigning in Montreal, said provincial premiers who have a clear idea of the message they want to deliver in Quebec are welcome and needn't ask permission from the no committee.

"Every premier from any province is absolutely free to come and speak in Quebec whenever he wants," Ryan said at a news conference, adding that several premiers had already inquired about possible participation in the campaign.

Ryan, whose news conference was his only public appearance Friday, said he also is discussing the role that Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau will play in the campaign, but he denied reports that the prime minister will be rushed into the fray.

Western Canada's provincial premiers, meanwhile, will make a joint appeal for national unity to the people of Quebec at their conference next week in Lethbridge.

The unity question will be a priority.

Argentina to Yellowknife – almost

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — Jose Cesar Azzalini, who set out three months ago to drive 60,000 kilometres from Argentina to Yellowknife, has reached his destination — but not by car.

The car, a two-cylinder Citroen, was stranded south of Great Slave Lake when spring break-up made the MacKenzie River impassable, 300 kilometres from the goal he had set for himself 14 countries earlier.

The city of Yellowknife heard of his plight and sent him a return plane ticket from Hay River.
